Mr. GARLAND asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1317) for the relief of John P. Moore; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1318) granting a pension to Seymour Colby; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 79) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts between the United States and the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HILL, of Colorado, it was Ordered, That the papers of Andrew White be withdrawn from the files of the Secretary's office and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

HARBOR OF GRAND HAVEN, MICHIGAN.

Mr. BALDWIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the Senate any supplemental report in his Department relating to the condition and improvement of the harbor at Grand Haven, Michigan, with such views of its importance and necessity and recommendations respecting the same, as may be deemed advisable by the Department.

COMMITTEE ON RIGHTS OF WOMEN CITIZENS.

Mr. McDONALD (by request) submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That a committee of nine Senators be appointed by the Senate, whose duty it shall be to receive, consider, and report upon all petitions, memorials, resolutions, and bills relating to the rights of women citizens of the United States, said committee to be called the Committee on the Rights of Women Citizens.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. ANTHONY. I offer an amendment to the rule or order of proceeding after the expiration of the morning hour, which I ask to have action upon at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Rhode Island submits an amendment to what is known as the Anthony rule, which will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add at the end of the resolution previously adopted:

And this order shall commence immediately after the call for concurrent and other resolutions; and shall take precedence of the unfinished business and other special orders.

Mr. ALLISON. Until when?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I object until I can understand the proposed rule.

Mr. ANTHONY. It is merely an amendment to the order of business under which we are proceeding after the expiration of the morning business, and which by the decision of the Chair, very properly rendered, is displaced by the unfinished business, thus cutting off the Calendar from consideration for the half hour after one o'clock. This amendment is merely designed to give the Calendar precedence for that half hour, until half past one o'clock, which is the only time when the Calendar has any chance to be considered.

Mr. ALLISON. I objected for the reason that I did not understand the purport of the amendment proposed. I do not object to extending the morning hour for half an hour after one o'clock, if that is the only effect of it.

Mr. ANTHONY. That is the effect of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the resolution go over and be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will withdraw his objection. I think if he will consider a moment he will see that there cannot be any objection to the proposition.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Very well.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the proposed amendment of the Anthony rule? The Chair hears none, and it is agreed to.

RETIRED ARMY OFFICERS.

Mr. ROLLINS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish the Senate of the United States the names of all officers of the Army retired from active service since the passage of the act of June 18, 1878, stating the date of retirement; the age, services, and rank of each officer so retired; and the number of officers retired at their own request over sixty-two years of age, since such retirement has been authorized.

REMAINS OF GENERAL SYKES.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] for a moment to the bill (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York, which passed the Senate on Tuesday last. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed was entered by the Senator from Connecticut. I beg to say to the Senate that this is a special and exceptional case. The remains have been kept on ice to the present hour, and there is a boat there upon which they can be sent to West Point. As was stated by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. BURNSIDE,] who knew him personally, General Sykes left no money to pay the expense of removal. The officers on the frontier are not "bloated bondholders," they are men of limited means. His last request on his death-bed was that his remains should be buried at West Point. I therefore hope the Senator from Connecticut will withdraw his motion to reconsider; and I appeal to him so to do.

Mr. EATON. After the passage of the bill the other day, it was suggested to me by half a dozen of my friends here that the matter ought to be further considered for the purpose of getting information upon it—perhaps the very information which the Senator from Texas has now given the Senate—and then the bill might be passed as a special case. I would not myself vote for it for the purpose of making a precedent for future action. Therefore it was that I desired to have the vote reconsidered by which the bill was passed. Perhaps the vote had better be reconsidered, and then let the bill be referred to some committee, and let them look into the matter and report as speedily as possible.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that the information I have is by telegraph, communicated to me this morning by the Representative of that district. General Sykes was a good officer, and this is one of those things which, if it be not done now, cannot be done at all.

Mr. EATON. I do not know why it could not be done to-morrow or the day after.

Mr. MAXEY. Because his remains are not yet interred. They are there awaiting shipment. They never have been interred. He died but a few days ago, and his remains have been kept on ice with a view of sending them to West Point for interment there. That is the reason for immediate action, and that reason cannot last.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Will the Senator from Texas allow me to say that I have telegraphic information to the effect that the steamer sails from Brazos to-morrow, the 17th, and it is very necessary, if the body is to be transported at all, that it should go on that steamer.

Mr. MAXEY. Yes; the steamer leaves to-morrow for New York.

Mr. EATON. I have not any serious objection to withdrawing the motion which I entered to reconsider, but I desire to say for myself, in my place here, that I shall not regard this action as a precedent for the future at all, and I hope the Senate will not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut withdraws the motion to reconsider. Does the Senate assent?

Mr. THURMAN. Before that question is put, I should like to know of some one who is better informed on this subject than I am, whether there are any precedents for an order or bill of this kind? I confess my entire ignorance upon the subject. I should like to know whether this has ever been done before?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Not to my knowledge. I was under the impression when I introduced the bill that there were precedents for it, and I gave instructions to have the matter looked up, but I have not yet had a report from the young man who was to hunt it up for me. I am quite sure that the remains of officers of the Army have been transported at public expense to West Point to be buried in the cemetery there, but I cannot state it with absolute authority. I do not think it would be a very great hardship to establish a precedent of this kind, so that when a graduate of the Military Academy dies in the service on the frontier and expresses on his death-bed a desire to be buried in the cemetery at West Point, he shall have his body transported there at public expense, if he leaves no means to transport it. I do not think the precedent would be a dangerous one. It certainly would not be an expensive one, because the number of graduates is very limited. If a man after long service, after having attained the highest rank that can be attained in the Union Army, dies, as I said before, at a distant post on the frontier, and expresses a desire that his body should be sent to West Point for burial, I do not think it would be a great hardship on the Government or a very bad precedent to establish to grant his request.

Mr. THURMAN. There is no question about the great merit of General Sykes. Everybody who was acquainted with him during the late civil war knows how very meritorious and able an officer he was. The only trouble there is in my mind is where we are to draw the line. Almost every officer that could be named——

Mr. BURNSIDE. I will state to the Senator from Ohio that General Scott's body was transported at the public expense. To be sure, his was an exceptional case; he was the commanding general and a hero of more wars than one. I do not pretend to say that this is a parallel case, but General Scott's body was not only transported to West Point by the authority of Congress at public expense, but escorted by a committee of Congress. I do not mean, however, to cite that to the Senator from Ohio as a precedent.

Mr. THURMAN. I am not objecting to this measure, as I did not object when the bill was passed the other day; but we go very largely into this matter of burying people. We take the body of every deceased member of Congress home and bury it at the public expense, and it is not a small expense either. If that practice is to be extended to the officers of the Army, it will be extremely difficult to draw a line between a gallant general and a gallant lieutenant.

Mr. EATON. Or a gallant private.

Mr. THURMAN. Or a gallant private.

Mr. BURNSIDE. In all matters, not only in military but in civil life, distinction gives certain rights, and it is very proper that it should be so. Men try to become distinguished because of the privileges that distinction gives them. It is my opinion that in nine-tenths of the cases that is the incentive to persons to become public men and to attain the highest position in either a civil or military capacity; and when men have attained it by hard work and labor they ought to be treated with consideration not only while living but after they are dead.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not object to the Senator from Connecticut withdrawing his motion, but I must say with him that I do not think this ought to establish a precedent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion to reconsider is withdrawn.

Mr. COCKRELL. I simply desire to say that I am opposed to this bill as a precedent. I do not think it is right, and I do not think that the ground assigned by the Senator from Rhode Island is tenable, that only the bodies of those officers who have been educated at the public expense at West Point should be transported to West Point for burial. There is General Miles, and there are hundreds of others who rose to rank from civil life, who are just as much entitled to the bounty and consideration of the Government as those who have graduated at the public expense at West Point.

This is an exceedingly dangerous precedent. If this is allowed in one case it ought to be allowed in all. There are to-day the bodies of a thousand gallant soldiers, captains and lieutenants, now in the Territories and in the far West, and if this body is to be transported at public expense to West Point or any other place the same justice should be meted out to them, and their bodies should be taken up and transported to their families.

Mr. MAXEY. I have only to say, in reply to the Senator from Missouri, that if General Miles or any other gallant and meritorious officer were to make a dying request to have his remains taken to West Point and buried there I would vote for it just as readily as I do for the removal of the remains of George Sykes. General Sykes requested that; and I vote for it not because he was a graduate of West Point but to fulfill the dying request of a man with whom I served in the Mexican war and whom I regard as a gallant and meritorious man. For that reason it is that I vote for this bill, and most cheerfully.

Mr. BURNSIDE. What the Senator from Texas has said has anticipated to a great extent what I would have said myself. In the case of any officer, whether a graduate of West Point or not, if he made a dying request to be buried at his place of nativity or his place of residence or any other place which was dear to him from the associations of life, no matter what college he graduated at, I would vote for the removal of his remains.

Mr. McDONALD. I believe the motion to reconsider has been withdrawn.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has been.

Mr. McDONALD. Therefore it is not before the Senate any longer.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not.

Mr. McDONALD. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That has been superseded this morning by the passage of the amendment to what is known as the Anthony rule. The unfinished business will not come up till half past one o'clock.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Do I understand that the bill in regard to General Sykes's remains has passed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill has passed the Senate, and it will be sent to the House of Representatives.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. WITHERS, and Mr. BLAINE.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and joint resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 2797) for the relief of certain citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and refunding to them taxes improperly collected from them on manufactured tobacco—to the Committee on Finance.

The bill (H. R. No. 4439) to remove the political disabilities of Sergeant P. P. Powell, Sixth Regiment United States Cavalry—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The bill (H. R. No. 4432) making additional appropriations for the support of certain Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1880—to the Committee on Appropriations.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 186) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish States, for the use of agricultural colleges, one set of standard weights and measures, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Finance.

HERMAN NETTERFIELD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield, the consideration of which was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, the report of the Committee on Pensions in this case is adverse to the passage of the bill; but the committee divide in their opinion as to the merits of the case. When this case was called on the last consideration of the Calendar, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KIRKWOOD] and the Senator from Florida, [Mr. CALL,] members of the Committee on Pensions, expressed their views dissenting from the report of the committee; and the remarks of those Senators on that occasion seemed to me sufficient to satisfy the Senate that the bill ought to pass, and that the pension provided for by the bill should be allowed to Netterfield, who is the claimant.

It appears that Netterfield was a scout connected with a company organized under an order of General Canby and under the immediate command of Lieutenant Earle. The instructions under which this company of scouts was organized are contained in a communication from the Department, which was before the Committee on Pensions. The character of the organization will appear in these instructions. I will read an extract from the instructions directed to Lieutenant Earle, commanding this squad:

SIR: I am directed by the major-general commanding to state that in addition to the authority granted in the letter under which your scouts were organized the following instructions are given you:

First. Your operations will not be limited to any particular section of the country, but at all times you will assist the general operations of the Army by deceiving the enemy, interrupting his couriers, carrying off detached parties, breaking up his mail communications, &c. You will endeavor to gain all possible information of the country, the general condition of the inhabitants, the roads, by-ways, bridle-paths, &c., the condition in reference to trade and agriculture outside the lines, the resources of the country as regards food for men, horses, securing guides, sending spies, reconnoitering fords, passages, defiles, and positions; gain all possible information in regard to position and number of the enemy, their relative amount of infantry, cavalry, and artillery, the strength of their fortifications, caliber of their guns, positions of their magazines and storehouses, strength and position of their guards and picket-lines, preparations to stop fires, &c.

These instructions show the character of the services which these persons were to perform, and a letter incorporated in the report of the committee shows that this company of scouts were to be organized into squads, and their services accepted on the special condition that "they will be held subject to strict military discipline and to the rules and articles of war."

It has been objected to the allowance of this pension that these scouts were not in the Army of the United States. It is true they were not technically a portion of the Army. If they had been, there would be no necessity whatever for any special act allowing a pension to one of them injured in the service in the line of his duty; but the difficulty is merely that there was no technical connection between this squad of scouts and the Army. The services performed by these men were of a military character; the services were the most dangerous that could be performed by any person connected with the military service. They were under the command of an officer of the Army, and they were under all the rules and regulations and subject to all the discipline of the Army of the United States.

Under these circumstances, if the particular case presented is a meritorious one, it appeals to the Senate of the United States and to the Congress of the United States to bring the particular case within the operation of the pension laws. There is always some reason why a pension cannot be allowed under existing laws where a special act is introduced for the purpose, either because the injury was suffered by a person not technically connected with the Army, or because, if connected with the Army, he is unable to prove that the injury was received in the line of duty.

Under such a state of facts as is presented here, the committee themselves assenting that the case is a meritorious one if it were within the law, not dissenting upon that point, I can only add that my own personal knowledge of the applicant in this case concurs with the conclusion at which the committee have arrived upon that point, because this gentleman is a resident of my own State, and I know that his disability is a serious one. The fact being that it was incurred under these circumstances, because from the report of the Secretary of War it appears that this man was detailed not only upon general service of this dangerous character but upon a special service of more dangerous character than would be inferred perhaps from the general instructions which I have read, I appeal to the Senate to pass this bill; and I suggest that the mere fact that this party was not an enlisted man should not be permitted to prevent the Government from extending to him the bounty which, if he had been an enlisted man, would have been assured to him.

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I have no interest whatever in this matter except as connected with the interests of the Government. This bill proposes to pension a man who does not belong to the class of men who are pensionable by the existing law. There is nothing that I know of in his case that makes it so exceptional that the Senate should depart from the custom which it has usually observed in voting to pension a man who is not pensionable under the law, and thereby extending the operation and benefit of the pension law to that class.

If it be the desire of the Senate to make pensionable a class of persons who under the existing laws are not pensionable, I humbly submit that it would be in the interest of justice and equity to extend the provisions of the general law to that extent, and not to select one or two or three cases in which Senators may take a personal and deep interest and pass laws giving to these parties the benefit of the pension-roll which others of the same class equally meritorious are excluded from. We have passed, I admit, one or two or possibly more acts granting pensions to persons of this class. I remember we passed one for a teamster at the earnest solicitation of my friend from West Virginia, and I submit that there is neither justice nor equity in selecting a few individual cases and giving them the benefit of the pension laws from which all others of the same class are excluded.

I will also state in this connection that there are now pending before the Pension Committee of the Senate probably a dozen bills in which the same principle is involved—bills for clerks, for teamsters, for civil employés of the Government—and the Committee on Pensions in considering this matter determined to explain the whole case to the Senate when this particular bill was put on the Calendar, in order that the Senate may vote understandingly in the matter, and in order that they may know that thereby a precedent will be established which will control the action of the Committee on Pensions on all similar applications, because we cannot consent to make one or two or three individuals beneficiaries under the pension acts when large numbers of the same class are excluded.

This Netterfield may have rendered important service. I do not deny it. I only say that he is not pensionable under existing law; that he was a civil employé of the Government, receiving probably three or four times as much as an enlisted man; that it was a voluntary contract which he entered into with the commander of the Army, from which——

Mr. McMILLAN. Allow me to say that while he may be termed a civil employé, yet his whole duty was military duty connected with the Army in the field, and the most dangerous and exposed service that a soldier of the United States could render in behalf of his Government. I merely wish to have that explanation go with the term "civil employé."

Mr. WITHERS. The fact stated by the Senator from Minnesota does not at all alter the statement which I made. He was a civil employé of the Government; he was not in the military service of the Government, although the duties which he performed were of a military character. It is true by the provisions of the contract or the regulations quoted by my friend he was subjected to all the rules and articles of war; but what were those rules and articles? They were not the rules and articles of war which a soldier is subjected to, but they were such rules and articles of war as were applicable to that class to which he belonged, the civil employés of the Government. That was all.

But, sir, I do not wish to protract the time nor prevent a vote. I merely want the Senate of the United States to vote with a full knowledge and understanding that by their decision upon this question they will control and decide the future policy of the Committee of the Senate on Pensions upon this class of cases.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not presume that the Committee on Pensions require any aid from anybody else to explain a bill coming from that committee, but I desire to answer one suggestion made by my friend from Minnesota. I certainly would be very glad if I could support a bill that he desired passed, for the benefit of one of his constituents; but in this particular case I cannot. The suggestion which I desired to reply to was that this man was subject to the rules and articles of war; that he was in the military service.

Mr. McMILLAN. Not technically.

Mr. LOGAN. I do not mean that the Senator said "technically," but the argument was that he was to all intents and purposes in the service of the Government under military rule. According to that theory, if the Senate of the United States should pass a bill of this kind appropriating money to pension a man performing the duties this person performed, you would be required to pension every teamster employed by the Quartermaster's Department. Teamsters, too, are subject to the rules and articles of war and so is every man employed in the service of the Government who is within the jurisdiction of the Army and performing service for the Government in connection with the Army. All such persons are subject to these rules and have to be for the benefit and discipline of the service.

Now, let me give an illustration. We had a great many steamboats employed in the service of the United States for the transportation of supplies up and down rivers. The captains of these boats and their whole crews were employed in the service of the Government and paid sometimes by the Government on the Government rolls. Where a boat was taken and impressed into the service of the United States, as it was called, the commanding officer would put some man in command of the vessel if the captain refused to serve, and he and all his crew would be subjected to the rules and orders of the commanding officer.

On the same principle on which this scout should be placed on the pension-roll, all men serving the Government in the transportation service or doing the work performed by scouts or by any other civilians connected with the Army, and who are subject to the rules and articles of war, would be pensionable. As I said in this case before, the service of a scout is a peculiar service, and I admit that it is dangerous service; for sometimes when they are arrested as spies the punishment of scouts is very severe. There is no question about that. But they make a written contract with the commanding officer to perform certain duties for a certain stipulated sum, and they know the service they are to perform and they take the risk. No such idea as pension ever occurs to them when the contract is made. The laws for pensioning persons for service to this Government apply to soldiers and apply to persons in the Navy enlisted for the purpose of doing battle for the country, and not to men employed for the purpose of discovering facts. There is a broad distinction. It is a part of the contract made with the soldier or an officer of the Army that if injured or disabled while in the line of his duty he shall receive from the Government this pittance during his life, not as a remuneration at all—for there can be no remuneration for the loss of limb or for permanent disability—but to aid him as much as the Government can on account of the fact that he has received his disability while performing his duty to the Government in its service. It does not apply to citizens, and it never was intended that it should, nor should it ever; for if so every citizen might in time of war connect himself—no matter in how remote a degree—with the Army in the performance of some service, and he would be a pensioner if he received a disability from sickness or otherwise. Take the carrying of the mails, for instance. We had our post-offices established in the Army and our mail messengers during the last war; and it is always so. They are not enlisted men, but they perform duties pertaining to the Army. They, too, might come and claim a pension if disabled in the performance of their duty.

I make this statement to the Senate because I do not want to see this precedent established, for if it is established there will be innumerable claims of this kind.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I know very little about——

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I must call for the enforcement of the Calendar order.

Mr. McMILLAN. I should like to know what rule the Senator desires enforced. I am not aware of what the rule is.

Mr. COCKRELL. Each Senator can speak but once on any given question while we are considering the Calendar under the present order.

Mr. CONKLING. I am inclined to think the Senator from Missouri himself was out of order. I see it is more than half after one. He had no right to be addressing the Chair as within the morning hour, when it had expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HARRIS in the chair.) The Chair had not observed that the hour of half past one had arrived. It is the duty of the Chair to announce that the morning hour has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to act upon this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. It will come up to-morrow; let it go over.

Mr. McMILLAN. Well, I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is the unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 19.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 14th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 857) authorizing the conversion of national gold banks, and this day the act (S. No. 578) granting an increase of pension to Samuel B. Davis.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to inquire if the amendments offered by the Committee on Public Lands have been acted on?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. None of them.

Mr. THURMAN. Then I wish to give notice of an amendment I will offer as soon as those amendments are acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill. Until that question is decided neither the amendments proposed by the committee nor any amendments suggested by the Senator from Ohio will be in order.

Mr. THURMAN. A bill can always be amended before a vote is put on indefinite postponement, for the amendments may take away all the merits of the motion. I think that is good law. I think while it is common to take the question on the amendments of the committee first, yet as all their amendments in this case are to the second section, an amendment to the first section would now be in order; and if there is no objection I will offer it now.

Mr. McDONALD. The motion is to indefinitely postpone, which cuts off amendments under the rules.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not agree to that law.

Mr. CONKLING. I call the attention of the Chair to Rule 43. Certainly no amendment is in order now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will order the Secretary to read Rule 43.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

When a question is pending, no motion shall be received but—
To adjourn,
To adjourn to a day certain, or that, when the Senate adjourn, it shall be to a day certain,
To take a recess,
To proceed to the consideration of executive business,
To lay on the table,
To postpone indefinitely,
To postpone to a day certain,
To commit,
To amend;
which several motions shall have precedence in the order in which they stand arranged.

Mr. CONKLING. "To amend" is the very last motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to indefinitely postpone the bill under consideration, upon which motion the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, it will be recollected that a special order was made for to-day to consider the case of Fitz-John Porter. Under the rules of the Senate the case necessarily lies over, the unfinished business having precedence. I desire to say that according to the terms of the arrangement made on Wednesday last I shall consider, unless there is objection on the part of the Senate, that immediately upon the present order being finished the order in the case that would have come up to-day will then take its regular course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks that will be the business next in order.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, as has already been stated in the debate, the State of Iowa is the largest beneficiary underthe provisions of this bill. For that reason, as well as for some others, which I may state hereafter, I deem it wise to give some of the reasons which will influence me in the vote I shall give for this bill.

In expressing the opinion, Mr. President, that I shall vote for this bill, I do not mean to say that I may not vote for amendments which may be offered, or that I may not myself offer one or two amendments. I only mean to say that I am in favor of the general scope and purpose of the bill. I am in favor of it because I believe that it is a just measure. So far as the State which I in part represent is concerned, we ask nothing by grace or favor. If we are not fairly entitled to the sum which this bill allots to us we do not ask it from the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. By "fairly" do you mean "lawfully?"

Mr. ALLISON. I mean fairly and lawfully, by a fair construction of the several statutes upon which this bill is based.

The Senator from Vermont in his remarks upon this bill objected to it because it was a donation to the several States without limit as to what could be done with the proceeds of the 5 per cent. on land-warrant locations treated as sales. So far as Iowa is concerned, that criticism upon the bill has no bearing or effect, because by the compact made between the State of Iowa and the Government of the United States, when Iowa was admitted as a State into the Union, it was expressly stipulated and provided that the 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of public lands should be devoted and set apart for the use of the common schools of our State, and the first constitution of the State of Iowa, the constitution under which the State was admitted into the Union, by the tenth article provides that this fund, whenever it shall be paid to the State, shall be sacredly set apart for the use of the common schools of our State. That is repeated and recapitulated in the revised constitution of 1857, which I will not take time now to read. Thus every dollar of this fund, by force of the passage of this bill, goes into the treasury of the State of Iowa, and by the constitution of that State every dollar of the fund is sacredly set apart for the use of the common schools. How small a sum it is, I need not call the attention of the Senate to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is it really?

Mr. ALLISON. It is probably from seven to eight hundred thousand dollars. When I speak of it as a small sum, I mean small in comparison with the amount that the State of Iowa, by taxation, imposed by her laws every year, devotes to educational purposes in that State. I have before me the report of the Commissioner of Education of the United States for 1877, in which I find extracts from the reports of our own State school superintendent showing that Iowa devotes annually to the public schools the sum of $5,000,000, and has done so for several years. I speak only in round numbers, not giving exact figures.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask what is the rate of taxation for schools in Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I cannot state definitely, but more than three-fourths of the sum which I have named, $5,000,000, comes out of the pockets of the people of the State of Iowa for common-school purposes. This fund, if granted to the State of Iowa, becomes a perpetual fund the principal of which cannot be used; only the interest of it can be used by the constitution of our State; it is only the interest of this fund that can be annually devoted to school purposes in our State. Assuming the amount at $800,000, the interest provided here being 3.65 per cent., the interest upon this fund will amount annually to only $29,200. What is that to the five hundred thousand boys and girls in Iowa? It is but six cents per annum for each of the youths of the State of Iowa to be reduced in ten years from now to three or four cents each per annum; and yet it is said here that this is for the benefit of the State of Iowa, and that we are standing here claiming the beneficence of this Government, because we ask that under these statutes there shall be awarded to us the pittance of five or six cents per annum to each of the boys and girls in our State, sacredly set apart for that purpose by the act of admission into the Union, and also by the fundamental law of our State, as I have already stated.

One objection made by the Senator from Vermont to this claim is that it is a stale claim, and I believe he read in his remarks a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury to the effect that no claim had been made for this fund, and he dignified it as hoary with age, being "fifty years old," and brought forward recently for the first time. I find on examination that in 1858 the State of Iowa, through its governor, made application for this fund to the then Secretary of the Interior, Jacob Thompson; and I find in Lester's Land Laws the reply of Jacob Thompson to the governor of the State of Iowa with reference to it; and to show you how carefully Mr. Thompson must have considered this subject, let me read what he says:

That act appropriates—

Alluding to the act of admission—

That act appropriates 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands for making public roads and canals within the State.

When by the act of admission and the assent of Congress afterward more clearly expressed the 5 per cent. was devoted sacredly to common schools in the State; yet, in this reply he states that it wa devoted for the purposes of public improvements, roads, and canals.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What page of Lester's Land Laws?

Mr. ALLISON. Lester's Land Laws, page 690. This letter of the Secretary of the Interior is dated September 20, 1858, and is addressed to the then governor of Iowa.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will you please read it in full. It is rather short, I think.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection. If the Senator desires it I will read it, of course.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
September 20, 1858.

In reply to your letter of the 7th instant in relation to the application for an allowance of 5 per cent., claimed to be due the State of Iowa on military land warrant locations, I have the honor to state that, in my opinion, the act of 1847 to which you refer, is a bounty land act, and that no distinction can properly be made between locations made under it and those made under other bounty land laws. The location of warrants issued under the act of 1847 is not considered as constituting a sale of the public lands as contemplated by the act admitting Iowa into the Union. That act appropriates 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands for making public roads and canals within the State. There being no net proceeds accruing from locations by military land warrants, the allowance of 5 per cent.on such locations cannot be regarded as having been appropriated or provided for by law.

J. THOMPSON, Secretary.

Governor R. P. LOWE, Iowa.

Of course I have not examined and do not care to go into the question of what other States may have done with reference to these bounty land warrants in the Interior Department. I take it for granted that they have been as vigilant as they ought to have been in reference to that question.

Perhaps I ought to say here that this was practically a new question even as late as 1858. Under the original laws passed in reference to bounty lands, special and specific lands were set apart for these bounties; and from 1830, when the Government undertook the issuance of scrip on account of revolutionary bounty lands, that scrip was always received as cash at the land offices, and was always counted as cash in the settlements with the different States; and therefore it is that the State of Ohio, on account of the 5 per cent., has received in one way and another nearly $600,000, and has still a claim for the remaining 2 per cent., amounting to nearly $400,000 more.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I do not interrupt my honorable friend, may I ask whether I understand him to say that Ohio has still a claim that he believes to be valid, or only that it makes a claim?

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the Senator is very well aware of the claim that Ohio makes for the remaining 2 per cent., Ohio having already received 3 per cent. of the 5 per cent. provided for by the original act or compact of admission.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the Senator was liable to be construed hereafter when his remarks are read, as declaring that in his judgment Ohio had a just claim for what is called the 2 per cent., and I was merely trying to find out what he meant.

Mr. ALLISON. I am not arguing that question now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then you express no opinion on that?

Mr. ALLISON. Not at this particular moment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. I was merely endeavoring to show at this moment that this is a new question with reference to the construction of bounty land warrant laws; that under the bounty land laws of 1812 and under the revolutionary bounty land acts specific lands were set apart for the purpose of satisfying those warrants. The act of May 6, 1812, setting apart six million acres to satisfy the bounty land warrants of 1812, took special care to fix the Territories within whose limits those bounty lands should be set apart.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What difference did that make?

Mr. ALLISON. It made this difference, that Ohio was then a State in the Union and Ohio took good care to see that these bounty land warrants were pushed over beyond the limits of the State of Ohio and beyond the limits of the State of Indiana into the then Territories of Michigan, Illinois, and Louisiana, and only four years afterward another law was passed providing that the Territory of Michigan should be exempted from the provisions of that law of 1812, and that these bounty land warrants should be pushed over again upon the Territory of Missouri, north of the Missouri River, and upon the Territory of Illinois. I only cite the several bounty land acts of 1812 and 1830 for the purpose of showing that specific provision had been made for them, and it was not until after the Mexican war began and the bounty lands provided for by the laws of 1847 and 1848 and subsequent acts came to be issued, that this question at all became an important one.

As I said before, so careful were the men who then were conducting the affairs of this Government with regard to bounty lands that although they had originally set apart in the Territory of Michigan two million acres to satisfy bounty land warrants, in 1816, four years after the original act passed, they pushed those bounty land warrants beyond the Territory of Michigan and located them in the Territories of Illinois and Missouri. So that all these claims, or nearly all, whatever they are or whatever may be their nature, arise out of laws passed after 1847.

It is claimed, Mr. President, because the words "net proceeds of sales" are used, that the lands located with warrants do not fairly come within the word "sales," and the Senator from Vermont expended a great deal of ingenuity and a great deal of argument to show what was meant or intended to be meant by the words "net proceeds of the sales of the public lands." Now in relation to what should be the fair construction of these words I do not think we ought to be called upon to refer to Bouvier's Dictionary, or Pothier on Contracts, or even to our own Story, but we should take into account the general scope and intent of these acts, and the purposes of the men who passed the various acts respecting bounty lands, as well as the men who gave these pledges and promises to the new States that might come into the Union after the promises were made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rise to ask a question to see if I understand my friend from Iowa. I understand him to mean that in construing the words "net proceeds of the sales of the public lands" we are not to be guided by the principles usually adopted in jurisprudence for the construction of statutes, but are to look to what we think the members from the various States may have thought it might include. Is that what he means?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; not at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then do I understand my honorable friend to mean only in what he has said, that we are to construe the language of these statutes, this compact as he calls it, just as a court would?

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand this question correctly, we are to construe these statutes under the compact, with reference to and having in view the contemporaneous construction given by the same men in other laws of Congress, and the construction given to these statutes or compacts directly or inferentially or circumstantially by subsequent acts of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must congratulate my honorable friend for having beaten Martin Van Buren in stating a thing so that nobody can understand it this time. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLISON. I thank my friend for the compliment. I will endeavor to more specifically state what I mean in this general statement, and perhaps then some of the Senators may be able to comprehend what I mean.

These land warrants are analogous to scrip issued by the Government——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, how do you prove that?

Mr. ALLISON. I prove it, first, from the fact that the scrip issued under the act of 1830 and subsequent acts of Congress, running down, I believe, to 1858, was issued first by the Secretary of the Treasury and afterward by the Secretary of the Interior in lieu of land warrants issued by the State of Virginia in payment of the sums which she had promised to pay her soldiers, either of the State of Virginia or on the continental establishment prior to 1783. It was by law provided that when the governor of the State of Virginia should certify to the Secretary of the Treasury that a certain person or the heirs of a certain person were entitled to land warrants or to locate land, the Secretary of the Treasury should issue scrip covering the number of acres of land, and that that scrip should be receivable in payment of public lands.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Exactly.

Mr. ALLISON. Exactly; receivable in payment of public lands. Now, the only possible difference is a difference of technical construction of the words "receivable" and "located."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the only difference.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir. I know that my reasoning will amuse my friend from Vermont very much.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does.

Mr. ALLISON. But that is the only difference. The land warrants were to be located on certain lands; the scrip was receivable in payment for public lands or the same lands; but after 1852 the land warrant was made as essentially scrip as was the Virginia military scrip under the revolutionary war, because by the act of 1852 every land warrant was made transferable and assignable, was deliverable as a promissory note to bearer after one assignment had been made. The warrants were perfectly negotiable, and they were liable to be laid upon any public land in the United States subject to private entry at any land office. Therefore they were in essence and in substance exactly what the military scrip was which had been issued first in 1830, and issued under subsequent acts away down to 1858, I believe, and every one of these scrip entries was counted as a sale, the proceeds of which formed a part of the 5 per cent. fund from 1830 to this day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Every one of the land warrants?

Mr. ALLISON. Every one of these several certificates of scrip.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Scrip, yes; but does the Senator mean to say that any land warrant was ever regarded as part of the fund on which to compute the 5 per cent.?

Mr. ALLISON. I have read to the Senator from Vermont the decision of the Secretary of the Interior declining to consider land warrants as part of the computation of the 5 per cent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wanted to understand exactly what the Senator meant. He said "every one of these," and the last he was speaking of were warrants.

Mr. ALLISON. I might say further that after 1852 these land warrants were of a higher character of security than the scrip itself, because they were locatable at any land office where lands were subject to private entry, and the scrip was only locatable or receivable at the places where the public lands had first been offered at public sale. Thus by reasonable and fair intendment these land warrants were of a higher character than the scrip which was received as cash. And not only that, but the land warrants were received as money by an express statute which I wish to read in the hearing of Senators. I shall read from the ninth volume of the Statutes at Large, page 332, "an act in relation to military land warrants."

Mr. EDMUNDS. What year is that?

Mr. ALLISON. The year 1848. This statute seems to have followed closely upon the bounty land acts of 1847 and 1848, relating to bounty lands granted to the soldiers of the Mexican War. It seems to have been intended for the purpose of facilitating the operations of those soldiers who had these bounty land warrants. I will read this statute:

That any non-commissioned officer, musician, or private, or his widow or heirs, who shall receive and hold in his own right a land warrant issued by the Government of the United States for military service, may locate the same in on legal subdivision on any public land subject to private entry, taking said land—at the price at which the same is subject to private entry, and reckoning the warrant at $1.25 per acre for the number of acres therein contained, and paying the balance, if any, in money; but no claim shall exist on the Government to pay for any balance on said warrant in money.

Mark the language: "taking said land"—

Therefore bounty land warrants after 1848 were taken as substitutes for money in the location of any land upon any subdivision. I, having an eighty-acre land warrant, desiring to enter one hundred and sixty acres, could put that land warrant in, as I could put gold and silver in, at $1.25 an acre, and pay the balance in money.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Would it interrupt my colleague if I should make a suggestion to him?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir, it would not interrupt me.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I have a very distinct recollection that during the time in which these land warrants were so extensively used in Iowa they had a quotable value in the money market in New York, and were quoted as regularly as the bonds of the United States are quoted to-day.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. In Saint Louis, too.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. My colleague will remember that fact.

Mr. ALLISON. I will come to that in a moment. I have called attention to this statute to show that the warrants were treated as money, and this is not the only statute which treats them as money. I must call the attention of the Senate again to the statute making the land warrants assignable, for the purpose of showing that the men of 1852 regarded them as evidences of debts due to the soldiers of the Republic for the battles which they had fought upon the plains of Mexico. What is its language? I shall not read the whole of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What volume is that?

Mr. ALLISON. I now quote from the Statutes at Large, volume 10, page 3.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What year?

Mr. ALLISON. Eighteen hundred and fifty-two. I shall only read the proviso:

Provided, That any person entitled to pre-emption right to any land shall be entitled to use any such land warrant in payment for the same at the rate of $1.25 per acre for the quantity of land therein specified.

A pre-emptor who had gone upon the public lands under the act of 1841 could take one of these land warrants, after the passage of this act of 1852, and locate it upon his pre-empted land as so much money, counting it at a dollar and a quarter an acre. There is a construction with reference to what these land warrants were to be used for, and how they were to be used as substitutes for money. Not only that, but this statute provides another thing. I now read another proviso, to which I beg to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont, for a fair construction of these laws.

Provided, further, That when said warrant shall be located on lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1.25 per acre, the locator of said warrants shall pay to the United States in cash the difference between the value of such warrants at $1.25 per acre and the tract of land located on.

That is to say, if lands valued at $2.50 an acre should be located with these land warrants, the purchaser or locator could take a land warrant and use it at $1.25 per acre, and he must add to it whatever sum was necessary to complete his location.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, that is exactly what he has to do. In the previous act which authorized the land warrant counting acres to count dollar and a quarter acres the minimum price acres, and he could enter his land upon that computation, the Senator omitted to read the last clause of it. The former act, the last part of which my friend did not read, said that the act should not authorize any balance to be paid to such person in money; so that the first act the Senator cites explicitly shows that a land warrant is not money and that the case is not a sale nor even a part of it. Now the Senator comes to this act, which is still more strongly against him, if he will pardon me for saying it, which says in terms that these do not fall under the head of sales at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not wish to get into a controversy with the Senator about any matter of fact, but I read the whole of the other statute, as the reporter will find when he comes to copy from the book I shall hand him.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The land-warrant act on page 332?

Mr. ALLISON. The act described on page 332, and it does not change one iota of the argument I am making. That act simply provided that the Government should not be bound to pay back to the locator of a warrant any money, but that for all intents and purposes his land warrant should be used and treated as money in payment for any of the public lands to which he might desire to attach his location.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to correct a misapprehension my friend from Iowa seemed to have, that I had imputed to him omitting to read this last clause, as I thought he did omit to read it, for any purpose of not letting the Senate understand it. I want to disclaim any such intention as that.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I did not hear the Senator read it. The last clause, which caught my attention as I looked it over afterward, is:

But no claim shall exist on the Government to pay for any balance on said warrant in money.

Very likely the Senator is correct in saying that he read it, but all I wished to say was that I disavow on the spot any implication that the Senator had failed to read it for a purpose.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course the Senator did not impute to me any improper intention or purpose.

Now, then, the proviso from which I have just quoted indicates that land warrants could be used as money for double minimum lands—lands that were valued at $2.50 an acre—and could be counted as money, and were so counted. But that is not all with reference to this statute and the reasonable construction that should be put upon it. By the second section of this statute it is provided:

That the registers and receivers of the land offices shall hereafter be severally authorized to charge and receive for their services in locating all military bounty land warrants issued since the 11th day of February, 1847, the same compensation or percentage to which they are entitled by law for sales of the public lands for cash.

If the Senator's construction of what "sales" means be true, why was it considered important to put in here "sales for cash?" Why was it important to distinguish by law sales for land warrants and sales for cash, because that statute clearly does make a distinction? The Senator from Vermont insists that locations by military bounty land warrants are not sales. This statute says they are sales, and they are to be computed as though they had been sales for cash instead of sales for military land warrants. I think there is no possible escape from this construction of this statute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The law before that authorized the receiver to have a certain percentage on his sales and did not say "sales for cash," as I think the Senator will find a sale and a sale for cash being understood to mean exactly the same thing. If I am right, therefore, in supposing that the law regarding the compensation of receivers of public moneys applied to all sales without using the word "cash" or any other term of addition or qualification or description, then if an entry with a bounty-land warrant was a sale, it did not need that law to give him the compensation on it.

Mr. ALLISON. Well, Mr. President, that is a question that it is not necessary for me to answer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is according to your argument.

Mr. ALLISON. I am only undertaking to show what contemporaneous legislation meant to have us understand the effect or import of land warrants was; that was all. And here they say that sales by means of land warrants shall be computed and counted by registers and receivers as though they had been sales for cash. It never entered the minds of the men who framed this statute that the location of a military bounty land warrant was not a sale; they had not reached that point of dialectics in 1852.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was the very point to which my question was directed which my friend is unwilling to answer.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, I want to call attention to another authority on this subject. I read from Lester's Land Laws again the opinion of a distinguished citizen of the State of Michigan, who was then Secretary of the Interior, giving the construction to this very statute to which I have undertaken to give a construction, to see whether he agrees with the Senator from Vermont. I read from Lester's Land Laws, volume 1, page 616, a letter signed by Robert McClelland, Secretary of the Interior, addressed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The date is May 21, 1856; it was after the passage of the act of 1852, to which I have just called attention:

I am of the opinion that the act of March 22, 1852—

The act which I have quoted—

was merely designed to declare that military bounty land warrants and all legal and valid locations thereof, "then authorized by law," should be assignable, and that the proviso in said law, in relation to pre-emptions, authorizing a pre-emptor to make use of such warrant, owned by him, "in payment for his pre-emption, at the rate of $1.25 per acre," &c., was intended only to make such land warrant in his hands equivalent to so much cash, and not to make it technically a "location," assignable under the previous provisions of said act, and against the positive provisions of the act of 1841, which prohibited any assignment of his right of pre-emption.

Mr. McClelland understood that this language meant to give the person holding a land warrant the authority to use that land warrant as so much cash. Of course that was not the primary question here involved in this letter. I will not permit the Senator from Vermont to divert me from Mr. McClelland's construction of the statute by saying that that was not the question raised. I know perfectly well it was not the question raised. The question raised here was whether that statute so modified the pre-emption law of 1841 as to enable a pre-emptor to assign his pre-emption claim. He says it does not so authorize; that it only meant to modify the pre-emption law sufficiently to authorize him to use land warrants as so much money, and he incidentally gives the construction to the proviso which I have given.

Mr. President, I have gone over these statutes for the purpose of showing that the people who were contemporaneous with the passage of the several bounty bills understood that land warrants were to be used pro tanto as money in the location of public lands, that they were so used, and as my colleague has said they had a quotable market value in New York and in the great cities of this country, as much as United States bonds have, or as much as greenbacks have, or any other currency of our country. They were as much currency for the purposes indicated by these laws as any currency that could be used. They were located in quantities upon the public lands, and used as money and as substitutes for money and in lieu of money.

But then I submit to Senators that we are not to construe these laws as we construe criminal statutes; we are not to construe them with that care and nicety that we would construe criminal statutes, nor are we to complain because Mr. Jacob Thompson refused to count these land warrants in the computation of the 5 per cent. due the several States. He was a mere executive officer. These statutes, I agree, are ambiguous, to say the least of it, and therefore it was the duty of an executive officer of the Government when money was required to be paid from the Treasury to examine the statutes with care, and if there was any doubt or ambiguity in them, to submit the question to Congress as Mr. Jacob Thompson undoubtedly intended to do in 1858, and he did it after his own State of Mississippi had received the full 5 per cent. which the law had given to her under the compact made when she was admitted into the Union as some of the other States had already received it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. She did not get it on any bounty lands.

Mr. ALLISON. But she got it on what was worse. The State of Mississippi was entitled to and did receive the 5 per cent. on all the Indian reservations in that State, although not one acre of those reservations had been sold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly true because Congress by an independent act chose to give it to her.

Mr. ALLISON. That is what I am endeavoring to show.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was a begging performance that was successful.

Mr. ALLISON. I am showing the general scope and intent and purpose of these various acts. Here was a large amount of land in the State of Mississippi and in the State of Alabama set apart as Indian reservations, and Congress in fairly construing these laws, or compacts if you please so to call them, with the new States admitted into the Union passed this act. The Senator said it was a begging statute. How does he know?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know by the debate and by the language of the statute.

Mr. ALLISON. I am quoting these statutes for the purpose of showing that these compacts were construed liberally by the men who made them from time to time with the new States that came into the Union, and they were construed so liberally as that Indian reservations not sold at all were computed and included at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is mistaken, I think, with great respect to him, (and he ought to be a little careful in his statements of fact,) in speaking of the Mississippi act as an act construing the compact of admission. If the Senator will look at the act itself and the small debate that was had about it, he will see that there was no attempt on the part of the Mississippi claimants, according to the best of my recollection, to hold that it was within any just construction of the act of admission; but the argument was that the State had expected to get more and it was supposed the Indian titles would all be extinguished—that was the expectation—and that they would get cash. That had all turned to be a mistake and had fallen through; and therefore Congress was appealed to to be kind and generous to them and give them this money, and Congress said it would.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course I do not mean to say that Congress, at the time the act was passed, construed the law so as to give Mississippi this percentage on the reservations. I only quote the act for the purpose of showing that Congress has uniformly in its dealings with the new States construed these statutes liberally and not technically, as though they were trying a criminal.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say it is no construction at all.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, Mr. President, as I said in the beginning, these claims (because if they are not claims they have no business here) arise chiefly out of statutes that were passed after 1847. I believe, although I have not examined the bill with that care which enables me to express a positive opinion upon it, that ninety-nine one-hundredths of the proceeds under this bill will be found to arise out of statutes that were passed after 1847. So far as I am concerned, I should be willing to make it wholly apply to the policy that was adopted by Congress in 1847 and subsequent years.

These statutes run over a series of years, from 1847 to 1858. They include first the soldiers of the Mexican war; then they include the soldiers and their heirs of the war of 1812 and the revolutionary war, taking in almost every imaginable case. I will enumerate specifically these statutes. They were of 1847, 1848, 1850, 1852, 1854, 1855, and finally 1858—a series of statutes intended to compensate the soldiers of the Republic for services that they had rendered, first, in establishing our Government; secondly, in the war of 1812; and, thirdly, in the war with Mexico; and also for services in all the Indian wars intervening, from 1790 down.

I call attention to these statutes and to the fact that Iowa seems to have a larger proportion of this sum than any other State. That is due to the fact that Iowa was admitted into the Union in 1846, before the beginning of the Mexican war. And now, lest I forget it hereafter, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont, who quoted the act of admission providing that for three years the bounty lands should be exempt from taxation in the State of Iowa under the war of 1812. It is true that exemption was made, but it was made in favor of those who might have these bounty lands or bounty land warrants.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not under the war of 1812 alone, I think. It was of universal application.

Mr. ALLISON. The language is "under the late war," and being in 1846 I take it it was the war of 1812.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator be kind enough to read the language?

Mr. ALLISON. The language was "under the late war." Will the Senator from Indiana read the language, as he has the book before him? My recollection is that it is "under the late war."

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator is correct about that. The language is as follows:

Provided, That the five foregoing propositions herein offered are on the condition that the Legislature of the said State, by virtue of the powers conferred upon it by the convention which framed the constitution of the said State, shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that the said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within the same by the United States, nor with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in such soil to the bona fide purchasers thereof; and that no tax shall be imposed on lands the property of the United States; and that in no case shall non-resident proprietors be taxed higher than residents; and that the bounty lands granted, or hereafter to be granted, for military services during the late war, shall, while they continue to be held by the patentees or their heirs, remain exempt from any tax laid by order or under the authority of the State, whether for State, county, township, or any other purpose, for the term of three years from and after the date of the patents respectively.

This is the act of March 3, 1845.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is "during the late war," whatever that may mean, but "which may hereafter be granted."

Mr. McDONALD. It applies to land warrants granted for services rendered "during the late war."

Mr. ALLISON. "During the late war;" that meant the warrants which had already been granted for the war of 1812, or warrants that might thereafter be granted for services during that war. Now, the public policy involved in that exemption was simply this: By the act of 1816 and by subsequent acts of Congress a portion of the land warrants that had been authorized for services in the war of 1812 were to be located in the then Territory of Missouri, north of the Missouri River, which comprehended what was involved in that act as a part of the State of Iowa.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will pardon me. If I do not annoy him by interruptions——

Mr. ALLISON. Not at all, because I only want to get at the facts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will pardon me if I suggest to him that I did not refer to the provision as affecting any question as to which war it was, or what the extent of it was, but for the purpose of calling his attention to the distinction that the statute admitting Iowa itself made between lands sold and bounty lands.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the purpose for which the Senator called attention to it, and I have referred to that law for a wholly different purpose; for the purpose of showing that at that time there were but few military land warrants, and that the Mexican war soon followed, the acts first giving lands to the soldiers who enlisted for service in that war, and finally, in 1850, 1852, and 1854, spreading a net-work of land warrants covering every war that had taken place in the United States since 1790.

Mr. President, could it have been contemplated, and if it was so contemplated, is it a fair and just interpretation now to give to these statutes, that, after assuring to Iowa for public schools, setting apart a sacred fund of 5 per cent., Congress, in the exercise of its sovereign power over bounty land warrants, meant to place these warrants in such condition as that Iowa was to be covered over with them, and by this wholly defeat the compact made with her? She had fifty-five thousand square miles of land when she was admitted into the Union. She had a right to suppose, and her people had a right to suppose, that here would be a fund that could be used for the education of her children for all time to come; and so careful was she of that fund that she provided that the principal of it should never be touched or disturbed, but that it should be held sacred forever, and that only the interest should be so applied. And by a subsequent provision in the constitution of our State, adopted in 1857, it is provided that any fund from any source whatever relating to public schools that shall be lost shall be counted as a part of the debt of the State, and the State shall pay into the school fund 6 per cent. per annum upon that account.

But now let us look a little further into this business. The Senator from Vermont gathered an argument of considerable proportions from the fact that in some way or other we had in receiving the Northwest Territory made such a contract or compact with the old State of Virginia as to preclude us now from paying any portion of the proceeds of this land to the new States of the Union. He, inadvertently of course, forgot to mention that of the thirteen new States of the Northwest and Southwest, only five were carved out of the Northwest Territory; that the State of Louisiana, the State of Arkansas, the State of Missouri, the State of Iowa, the State of Minnesota, the State of Nebraska, the State of Colorado, and the State of Kansas are all States that came to us from the Louisiana purchase of 1803, and had no connection whatever with the ordinance by which Virginia ceded to the United States a portion of her territory. So whatever argument there is with reference to the Northwest Territory, it seems to me cannot apply to this great number of States, the majority of the States benefited by this bill, who came into the Union under the Louisiana purchase, and not under the cession from Virginia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Perhaps you will be willing to strike out the five States you refer to from this bill, and try the others on this bill.

Mr. ALLISON. No; I am merely stating that the Senator, through inadvertence, led us to believe the other day that all the States benefited by this bill were included in the Northwest Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say that.

Mr. ALLISON. I know the Senator did not say that, but he made no exception, although there are nine States which do not come in under that, whatever may be the argument in reference to the Northwest Territory. But I submit to the Senator that even that argument comes too late, because over and over again we have dealt with the lands in the Northwest Territory without reference to that ordinance so far as the question of the distribution of the proceeds of sales is concerned. The act of 1841—I only state for the purpose of showing what Congress then thought of our obligations to the State of Virginia—provided that 10 per cent. of all the proceeds of public lands thereafter sold should go to certain specified States, most of them, I believe all of them, although I am not quite clear about that, nearly all of them States within the Northwest Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there are only five now, there could not have been ten then.

Mr. ALLISON. Not ten States; 10 per cent. in addition to the 5 per cent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will allow me I may inform him on that point that the 10 per cent. was given to every one of the newly admitted States that had lands within their borders, and the balance was to be divided among all the people of the United States evenly, and each of these States was to have five hundred thousand acres besides. They took the land and then repealed the provision for giving the rest of the money to all the States.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, that is hardly a fair statement, I submit to the Senator from Vermont, of what was done by the act of 1841. That act of 1841, it is true, provided that 10 per cent. should be given to certain specified States and that the remainder of the proceeds of the public lands should be paid over to all the States and all the Territories in proportion to their population. It provided also that five hundred thousand acres of land should be granted to each new State, and provided right in the same statute that it might be abrogated, first, by a positive provision of law; secondly, by a foreign war; and thirdly, by a modification of the tariff whereby the tariff should be increased beyond 20 per cent. So it was perfectly understood at the time that subsequent legislation might take away the provision for distribution, and it was not only so understood, but in 1848 a special act was passed on the subject with reference to the limitations and exceptions.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Precisely. If my honorable friend will pardon me, the act of 1841 provided for a final disposition of the public lands and their proceeds by giving 10 per cent. to the States that had any in them, in addition to the five, by giving to each one of these States that had any lands in them five hundred thousand acres of land in lieu of what they had before, by giving the rest of the money, the proceeds of the sales, to all the States alike, in other words for the general benefit. Then it provided that that act should be suspended whenever there was a foreign war and that it should be held up whenever Congress made a modification of the tariff that increased the duties byond 30 per cent. or whatever it was. They did make a modification of the tariff, not having a foreign war handy just at that time, which suspended the act. Then it was discovered that in order to keep the lands it was necessary that it should be declared by an act afterward that only the later sections of that act after section 6 I believe should be suspended and all the first sections—or whichever way it was—finally Congress declared that half of the act should be suspended, the half that gave anything to the old States, and that part of it which gave lands to the new States was to still go on notwithstanding the tariff. That is a correct statement I believe.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a partial statement also. The object of the statute of 1848 was to keep in force the pre-emption law of 1841, and nothing more nor less, and, therefore, it provided that the suspension should only apply to the first four sections of the act of 1841.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was it necessary in order to keep the pre-emption law in force, that each new State should have five hundred thousand acres of land that could not be pre-empted?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should think not.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the object of the suspension, namely, to preserve the pre-emption laws. So much for that.

The Senator from Vermont took great care to go into all the question of our public lands and by implication he repeats this morning that inasmuch as we had five hundred thousand acres of land granted to us for educational purposes therefore we are not entitled to what the law gives us or what we believe, by a fair construction of these laws taking them all together, we are entitled to on account of the sales of the public lands. This leads me as it did him to examine to some extent the public policy of this Government with respect to our public lands.

It will be seen by a reference to the ancient statutes that it was the policy of the Government during the early years of our history to carefully preserve the public lands, and that policy gradually became relaxed, first, by means of bounties to soldiers; secondly, by means of grants for educational purposes, as in 1841, and finally the flood-gates were opened in 1850, and the first precedent was made for lands to be granted for purposes of internal improvement with reference to the railways, there having before that time been grants of land for purposes of building canals and roads, &c. In 1850 a "new departure" was made in the policy of this Government with reference to the public lands, having no regard to new States or Territories, having no regard to the local benefits that a State or a Territory would derive from these grants, any more than the Congress of the United States have regard for the local benefits that are to be made by reason of a tariff of a cent and a half a pound on steel, if you please, or upon any other article that is manufactured in one of these States and cannot be manufactured in another—no more regard to this question which we are considering now than the blowing out of the rocks of Hell Gate has to it.

Mr. President, what was this policy? It was that the States having public lands should be especially developed by means of railways and railway construction, and the whole country thereby be enabled to increase its commerce, internal and external, by increase of production. It was provided, in order that the Government should lose nothing, that the alternate sections should have a double minimum price, namely, $2.50 per acre, and that thereby the Government would reimburse itself for the lands granted to railways or to States for railway purposes. That policy, begun in 1850, was pursued and continued until a very recent date, which I will not trouble the Senate to consider.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator a question right there?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. About this double minimum business which is always amusing when it is brought forward in this way, I ask the Senator if he really means to say that the double minimum limitation in these railway grants had for its primary object to keep the Government from losing anything; or was it always the astute performance of the railway man who wanted the land, in order that the Government should not undersell him, and that he should get $2.50 an acre for his grant?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no insinuation to make about the astute performance of any railway grant or any railway man engaged in such a grant. I mean to say that the primary object of the Government was to secure double minimum price for all lands within a certain number of miles of the railway, and that double minimum has always been received, and thus paid for the land granted to the railway. Of course it was a sound measure of policy, because the land within six miles of the railway would be enhanced in value by reason of the grant and the construction of the railway. So of the swamp lands. That was entirely a different question. That was a question having its origin, I believe, in the State of Mississippi, because in the Southwestern States these lands, for years and years, had been open to sale at the minimum price of a dollar and a quarter an acre; they were not sold at a dollar and a quarter an acre; the price was finally reduced to twelve and a half cents an acre, and they were not then sold. This was true of many of the lands in the State of Mississippi and other Southern States; and Congress, in the exercise of a sound public judgment, in my belief, provided that these lands should be donated to the States, whose duty it would be to reclaim them, and when reclaimed and sold the proceeds should be applied to purposes of levees, drainage, &c. Therefore these lands were granted absolutely to the States upon an entirely different principle and having no connection whatever with the military bounty land warrants; and yet, because a large number of acres were eventually taken out for this purpose, that is brought in here as a make-weight against this bill, and we are told that thirty, forty, or fifty million acres were so granted. So of all the other purposes, they have no relation whatever to this bill.

But, Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont who argues against this bill seems to argue as though there were some sacred right to these lands in the hands of the Government of the United States which could not be infringed upon. I think if we are to go into this question it might be proper to go a step further and inquire how it is that the United States itself has this sacred right to this soil. If we were to do that we should find that the five Northwestern States were granted by the State of Virginia for little or no consideration whatever to the Union; we should find that the Louisiana purchase only cost us $12,000,000; and yet from the Louisiana purchase and from the Northwest Territory we have carved out thirteen or fourteen States of this Union, comprising I do not know how many hundreds of millions of acres of land. The old States of the Union had their lands set apart to them. The Government of the United States never undertook to interfere with the lands in any of the older States of the Union. She did call upon North Carolina and Virginia to make cessions in the interest of the whole Union, and those two States did make large cessions, as did the State of Georgia, of portions of their territory, and made partially without consideration and made really, I believe in some instances, without any consideration, or, if any consideration, a very small one. So if there are any equities in this matter, these equities do not belong to the Government of the United States wholly, because the lands acquired by the Government of the United States were acquired for small sums of money, or for no money at all, or by reason of Indian cessions of different reservations or lands supposed to be held by a possessory title by the Indians in the Western States.

But there is another question which it is worth while for us to consider, and which I regret to say I have not been able to find full statistics about, and that is, what are the real equities in this case? The Senator from Vermont says that we are taking this money out of the Treasury, and that we are taxing the American people to pay this money. Are we? Is that a fair statement to be made when we are considering the question of the 5 per cent. of net proceeds? Mr. President, I have before me a statement taken from the records of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, showing that there has been paid into the Treasury in all since 1850, since these bounty land laws were passed, since these great acts and grants, $81,418,441 for the sales of public lands. Eighty-one million dollars in thirty years have been paid into the Treasury and contributed by the people in these new States to the Treasury of the United States. That is in addition to all the soldiers of Vermont and all the soldiers of New England and all the soldiers of Pennsylvania and Virginia who received bounty lands by virtue of their services in the revolutionary war and the wars of 1812 and 1847. So that, if this bill shall pass, it does not give us 5 per cent. upon the money that has actually been paid into the Treasury of the United States in the last thirty years. I submit, then, that it is no burden on the Treasury; and if we are called to do this by a fair construction of these several grants it does not lie in the pathway of the older States of this Union to say that we shall not have this money because it comes out of the tax-payers of the whole country. We have, as we believe, a fair title to this money by virtue of the articles of compact made with us, and, so believing, there is an ample fund out of which it can be paid without drawing upon the Treasury of the United States for a single dollar, except in form, as the proceeds of the public lands would pay the whole of it in two years.

Therefore, Mr. President, although I have not stated all I meant to say upon this question, I have gone over a few of what I consider the salient points and facts which entitle us at the hands of the Congress of the United States to receive what you promised to give us in the several compacts by which we were admitted into the Union upon an equality with all the States.

It has been intimated by the Senator from Ohio that there may be opposition to the bill because a portion of the money goes to the Southern States. For myself, and I speak for myself alone, I regret exceedingly that a larger per cent. is not found to be due to the States in the South, who I think above all other States require the aid and service of the General Government in helping them in the education of the colored people of the South. Therefore, whatever that is, I am willing it should be given freely, and I shall be glad if they could be able to find their title clear to more than is involved in this bill. And I believe that it is no waste of the public money, no waste of the proceeds of the sales of public lands, to have them applied, as these statutes intended they should be applied, to the education of the youth of our country, whether they be North, South, East, or West.

Mr. President, after having given a careful study to this question, as careful a study as I could give it within the last four or five days, I have come to the conclusion that as a matter of law and of justice we are entitled to the passage of this bill. We claim it on no other ground. We claim that we are entitled to it under the construction made by these statutes from time to time by the Congress of the United States, and we are not to be debarred from it from the simple fact that an executive officer of the Government in the careful exercise of the powers granted to him has seen fit to decide against us, and remitted the whole question to Congress, and because Congress for several years has failed to give these compacts the construction which they are fairly entitled to, as I have endeavored to show.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that this bill be indefinitely postponed. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I think one or two Senators desire to address the Senate on this subject before the vote is taken. One of the Senators from Florida [Mr. JONES] I think has a desire of that kind, and I think I, myself, should like to say a few words on the subject before the vote is taken. I move, therefore, not with a desire of having the floor to-morrow morning, which I think the Senator from Florida desires to have, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. THURMAN. I have an amendment that I intend to offer to the bill under consideration. It is not in order to offer it now, but I submit it and ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it be read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read for information.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert in line 9, section 1, immediately before the word "whose," the words:

Including Virginia military and United States military land warrants located in the State of Ohio after her admission into the Union.

The amendment was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. KING, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-four minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened and (at three o'clock and twenty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 16, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journals of Friday and Saturday were read.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. BARBER. I desire to make a correction of the Journal. I am represented as having voted in favor of House bill No. 2797, for the relief of certain citizens of Lynchburgh, Virginia, and refunding to them taxes improperly collected from them on manufactured tobacco. I was not present at the time, being paired with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. EWING,] and did not vote.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made accordingly.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour will begin at twenty-one minutes past twelve o'clock. This being Monday, the first business in order during the morning hour is the call of States and Territories for the introduction on leave of bills and joint resolutions for reference to their appropriate committees. During this call memorials and resolutions of State and territorial Legislatures are in order, and also resolutions calling for executive information, for reference to appropriate committees.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move by unanimous consent that the call for bills and joint resolutions be proceeded with until all the States and Territories have been called.

Mr. WEAVER. I object.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WEAVER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. COFFROTH. I am directed by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to move to suspend the rules and pass the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. GIBSON. I was not present when my State was called, and I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference.

The SPEAKER. That has been objected to by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. WEAVER,] who calls for the regular order.

Mr. WEAVER. How long will it take for gentlemen to introduce their bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is unable to answer; it might take five minutes, it might take longer.

Mr. WEAVER. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, motions to suspend the rules are now in order, this being Monday, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. COFFROTH.]

Mr. WEAVER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WEAVER. I send to the Clerk's desk and ask that he read an extract I have marked in the RECORD of the proceedings of Monday last.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The right of recognition is with the Chair, under the rules and under the practice. During the last and the present session the Chair has laid down for himself as a rule which would govern him in all cases, that where a member claiming the floor for a motion to suspend the rules states that he does so under instructions from a committee, the Chair will recognize him in preference to any individual member. The Chair thinks it not only just but in the direction of promoting legislation that a committee in their collective capacity should have the right of recognition in preference to an individual member.

Mr. WEAVER. The inquiry I wish to make of the Chair is this: whether it is competent for the Chair to make a rule, whether that is not legitimately and exclusively within the province of the House? The Chair says that "during the last and the present session the Chair has laid down for himself as a rule which would govern him in all cases"—the Chair has made a rule which would govern him in all future time. That rule seems to have been made at the first appearance of the third party in this House. Now, I ask the Chair whether it is competent for the Speaker to make a rule of this House which is not sanctioned by the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will, in answer to the gentleman, state that immediately upon a disposition being made manifest in this House on all sides at the last session of Congress, against the practice theretofore in force of a list being kept by the Chair of those desiring to move a suspension of the rules, the Chair then determined that he would adhere to the rule as stated by him and as exemplified in the report from the Committee on Rules made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.] That rule is that the duty of recognizing members for such purpose devolved upon the Chair; it was a responsibility which belonged to the Chair, and therefore in case of a contest for recognition by the Chair for such purpose between two or more members the Chair would thereafter always recognize first the member who declared that he made the motion to suspend the rules by instruction of the committee to which he belonged, in preference to an individual member who had no committee at his back.

There is an easy remedy for the gentleman and for the House. If the House is not satisfied with that judgment of the Chair, the members of the House can overrule him; or if the House is not satisfied with the recognition which the Chair makes of committeemen in preference to individual members, it can always have a remedy by voting down the motions made by those committeemen to suspend the rules, until individuals are reached. The Chair is willing to obey the House in every respect.

Mr. WEAVER. One other remark, if the Chair pleases. As a matter of course I understand that the House has that power; but I also understand that the House would be very reluctant to do a thing of that kind. I only wish to reiterate my objection to the ruling of the Chair on the ground that it practically cuts off individual members from recognition.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it does no such thing. If the House desires to reach any proposition in the hands of an individual member there is a straight road to it. So far as the gentleman's allusion to the appearance of a third party in this House is concerned, the Chair desires to state that he will adhere to the rule without regard to any and all parties.

Mr. CONGER. May I ask the Chair whether on the recognition of any member to submit a resolution to suspend the rules the question of consideration could be raised in a parliamentary way?

The SPEAKER. It could not be, because the proposition is to suspend all the rules, the rule in regard to raising the question of consideration inclusive.

Mr. CONGER. Is there any way in which the House can determine what subject it will consider on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules, to suspend every one that interferes with the proposition presented to the House for action.

Mr. WEAVER. Will the Chair permit me further to remark——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Iowa that he is really wasting time that might be used in an effort to reach his proposition.

Mr. WEAVER. I thought it was in the interest of fairness and prompt legislation, however.

The SPEAKER. All right; the Chair will hear the gentleman. He only made the suggestion to the gentleman in all kindness.

Mr. WEAVER. The suggestion I wish to make is this: that the right of an individual member to move a suspension of the rules on Monday was, in my judgment, designed in its very origin to prevent the domination of committees over the House. The ruling of the Chair, I submit, saps the very reason of Rule 145.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects a rule of the House, enacted prior to the Forty-fourth Congress, whereby a member could not obtain a vote on a motion to suspend the rules unless the motion was seconded by a majority vote. When the Forty-fourth Congress came in that rule was promptly repealed, so as to give the right to move a suspension of the rules and to call the yeas and nays thereon without first requiring a second. The rules therefore are in this Congress as in the Forty-fourth more liberal to the individual member than during the Forty-third Congress.

Mr. WEAVER. The rules are liberal enough.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. COFFROTH. By the unanimous instruction of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Wednesday evening February 18 and Wednesday evening February 25, 1880, be set apart to be devoted exclusively to receiving reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and for consideration and action on pension bills in their order pending in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; no other business to be transacted.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] that the hour of half past seven be named in the resolution for the meeting of the House on the evenings mentioned.

Mr. COFFROTH. Very well.

The SPEAKER (having put the question on the motion of Mr. BUCKNER) said: The noes appear to prevail.

Mr. BUCKNER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; there being—ayes 39, noes 75.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 11, nays 216, not voting 65; as follows:

So the House refused to adjourn.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. DWIGHT. My colleague, Mr. MONEY, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. MONEY, and the gentleman from Vermont, Mr. JOYCE, are paired.

Mr. WRIGHT. I am paired with my colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. SMITH, upon all political questions. I make this announcement to show that he is absent.

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. RYON, is paired with my colleague, Mr. HARMER; and my colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, with the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BLAKE. Both Mr. RYON and Mr. BACHMAN would vote "no."

Mr. McLANE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. URNER, who is absent from the House on account of indisposition.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman from Connecticut, Mr. WAIT, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. MULLER.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. DAVIS, is paired with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GODSHALK.

Mr. DAVIS, of California. I am paired with the gentleman from Maryland, Mr. KIMMEL.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. VALENTINE.

Mr. WHITE. My colleague, Mr. O'NEILL, is paired on all political and financial questions with the gentleman from West Virginia, Mr. KENNA.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 170) concerning an international fishery exhibition to be held in Berlin, Germany, in April, 1880.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the return, for concurrence of the House, of a bill (S. No. 56) for the relief of Edward Braden and J. W. Angus.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to a bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, asked for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. WINDOM, Mr. WITHERS, and Mr. BLAINE, the managers of said conference on its part.

It further announced the passage of a bill (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York; in which concurrence was requested.

REMAINS OF GENERAL SYKES.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask, Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill just brought over from the Senate (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York.

The body of General Sykes is lying at Brownsville, where he died a few days since, awaiting action of Congress to provide means for transporting it to West Point for burial.

Mr. HUNTON. Although the hour has arrived for the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia, if there be no objection I will yield for the purpose of having this bill passed.

There was no objection, and the bill was taken from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to have the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, transported from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money now in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry this act into effect.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, the House proceeds, under the rules, to consider the business coming from the Committee for the District of Columbia. The first question in order is on the unfinished business coming over from the last District day.

Mr. HUNTON. Before proceeding to the unfinished business I hope the House will consent to the disposition of some plain matters.

Mr. COFFROTH. I object.

UNION DEPOT, WASHINGTON.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business coming over from the last District day is a bill (H. R. No. 3047) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to designate a proper site for a union railroad depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes, reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia by the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. MARTIN] with amendments.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the commissioners of the District of Columbia to designate a suitable site for a union railroad depot for all the railroad companies whose tracks enter or terminate in said city, at some central point, having just reference to the convenience of access by said companies and the people, sojourners, and visitors of said city, and to all the public interests involved, and report their doings in the premises to the next Congress, on the first day of the first session thereof, with a bill containing such further provisions as they may deem best calculated to give effect to the purpose of requiring all said railroads to use said depot in common, and vacate all other depots, and remove all tracks not necessary for such use.

The amendments were read, as follows:

First. Section 1, line 10, after the word "premises," strike out to and including the word "thereof," in line 11, and insert the following:

"To Congress within thirty days after the passage of this act."

Second. Page 2, at the end of line 15, insert as follows:

"Provided, That such union depot shall be provided by such railroads free of expense to the Government of the United States or the District of Columbia."

Mr. HUNTON. The previous question was demanded on the engrossment and third reading of that bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. I was not aware the previous question had been seconded.

Mr. HUNTON. The bill was debated, when the previous question was demanded by the gentleman from Delaware.

The SPEAKER. The previous question was demanded but not seconded.

Mr. CONGER. Will the previous question operate on the bill and amendments?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to make an inquiry for the purpose of information.

Mr. HUNTON. I will hear it.

Mr. HAWLEY. This bill says "designate a proper site." If it had said "recommend" I could understand it better; but it says "designate a site." I suppose the purpose of the bill is merely to have some recommendation of opinion from the commissioners of the District; but this bill looks too much like the final establishment of a depot. I am not ready, I do not know enough to commit myself to that.

Mr. HUNTON. I will say to the gentleman from Connecticut there is no desire on the part of the committee or any member of it to commit this House to any proposition the commissioners may report. All we ask from the commissioners is such information as they may obtain in regard to the establishment of a union depot upon some proper site in this city.

Mr. HAWLEY. The latter part states what the railroads shall do.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to substitute "recommend" for the word "designate."

Mr. HAWLEY. That will suit me better.

Mr. ATKINS. Recommend to whom?

Mr. HUNTON. To this Congress.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the modification suggested will be agreed to by unanimous consent.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman if it is the purpose of this bill to require the removal to a little further distance from the center of the capital the place where all the railroads shall have their depots?

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the gentleman. There is a great want felt in the city of Washington for a union depot where all the people going out of the city shall congregate and leave by whatever road they please. Besides, it is believed by a great many people in the city of Washington the present depots are inconveniently and improperly located, and the object of this bill is to bring all the facts in connection with it before the House, so when those facts are in possession of the House we may take such action as may be deemed best.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, this proposition is before the House. I think it is a want long felt in the city that instead of having depots scattered in various parts of the city they should all be in one place. And I wish to say in this connection I have always felt—I did at the time the law was passed, and I feel it more strongly every time I see the site of the depots here—that it is a great incongruity to have one railroad depot right under the eaves of the Capitol, or one corner of it here, and another with its track coming right through one of the most beautiful parks, through grounds that ought to be open as a continuous public park from La Fayette Square to the Capitol. The sooner we have removed these depots from such positions to a more convenient central location the better it will be for all concerned.

Now, if this bill looks in that direction I shall give it my hearty support.

Mr. TALBOTT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio how it was these depots got where they now are?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. HUNTON. I cannot yield to debate, but I will yield to any question.

Mr. DUNNELL. The gentleman from Virginia yielded to the gentleman from Ohio, who injected a speech in favor of the bill.

Mr. HUNTON. I could not help that.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer any question, but I do not wish to listen to a speech.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask whether it is supposed the passage of this bill can do otherwise than lead to a very large expense, amounting to many thousands of dollars, to be paid in part by the United States? For what purpose is this bill introduced if it be not to bring about just such a result? Does the gentleman suppose these railroads can be driven into one union depot without involving immense expense?

Mr. HUNTON. I will answer the gentleman. The bill provides upon its face that there shall not be one dollar of expense either to the Government or the District.

Mr. DUNNELL. Not so far as this report goes.

Mr. HUNTON. Very well.

Mr. DUNNELL. But suppose they make a report and we accept it, does not that pave the way to subsequent legislation, compelling us to grant right of way, and involving other expenses?

Mr. HUNTON. This bill leaves that question as open as it is to-day, and if the House chooses to adopt the report which may be made it can do so.

Mr. DUNNELL. One word more. I insist the city of Washington——

Mr. HUNTON. I do not yield for any insisting.

Mr. CONGER. Then let us have a vote on the previous question and vote it down.

Mr. CLYMER. Is it not a fact that in the grant authorizing these railroads to come within the limits of this city power was specially reserved to the Government at any time to cause the removal of these depots?

Mr. HUNTON. Yes; the power was reserved to alter, amend, or repeal.

Mr. REAGAN. Let it be understood, however, that the removal of these depots will involve the payment for the property vacated.

Mr. TALBOTT. I wish to ask another question. Does not this involve the cession of more territory?

Mr. HUNTON. Not one dollar.

Mr. BLOUNT. I insist that this is all irregular. If the gentleman has demanded the previous question and declines to allow any further debate, it seems to me we ought to be brought to a vote.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is on the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 61, noes 37.

Mr. REAGAN. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair orders tellers and appoints Mr. HUNTON and Mr. CONGER.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 95, noes 56.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was ordered to be now put.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered to be put; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The amendments reported from the committee were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HUNTON demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CONGER demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 104, nays 91, not voting 97; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. DAVIS, is paired with Mr. GODSHALK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. CABELL. I am paired with Mr. FISHER, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Mr. EWING, of Ohio, is paired with Mr. BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague from New York, Mr. MCCOOK.

Mr. AIKEN. I am paired with Mr. WARD, of Pennsylvania. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. COBB. I am paired with my colleague from Indiana, Mr. CALKINS, who is absent on important business. If present, he would on this question have voted "no," and I have voted "no."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi, and Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, are paired.

Mr. SHALLENBERGER. Mr. URNER, of Maryland, is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. BARBER. I am paired with Mr. EWING, of Ohio.

Mr. DAVIS, of California. I am paired with Mr. KIMMEL, of Maryland, on political questions. This not being a political question, I vote "ay."

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. BOYD, is paired with Mr. HENRY, of Maryland.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. MULLER, of New York, and Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut, are paired.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired with Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If Mr. O'NEILL were present, I should vote "no."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. KENNA, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York.

NATIONAL FAIR GROUNDS ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HUNTON, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4429) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Fair Grounds Association."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the board of directors of said association shall consist of eight members, to be elected and hold their office as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That within thirty days after the passage of this act the stockholders of said association shall be assembled in general meeting, and shall elect three additional members of the board of directors, who shall hold their office until the second Monday in January, 1881, and until their successors are elected.

SEC. 3. On the second Monday in January, 1881, and annually thereafter, the stockholders of said association shall be convened in general meeting, and shall elect a board of eight directors, four of whom shall be chosen from the members of the board of directors of the previous year, all of whom shall hold their office for one year, and until their successors are elected; four of whom shall constitute a quorum, and all shall be stockholders of the association.

SEC. 4. At the meetings of the stockholders to elect the board of directors each stockholder shall be entitled to one vote for each share of stock owned by him and registered on the transfer books of the association; stockholders may vote by proxy, and the authority must be in writing signed by the stockholder.

SEC. 5. The name of said corporation shall hereafter be "The National Fair Association."

Mr. HUNTON. The object of this bill is to amend the charter of the National Fair Grounds Association in only two particulars. It changes the name, and increases the directors from five to eight.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRAINT FOR DISTRICT TAXES.

Mr. HUNTON also, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4565) to amend the fifth section of the act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," which was read a first and second time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the fifth section of the act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended so that in addition to the power therein conferred to sell real estate charged with the payment of any tax, the collector may, and it shall be his duty to, distrain sufficient goods and chattels of the owner of such real estate, if such can be found within said District, to pay the taxes remaining due on said real estate under the provisions of said act or any other law, together with all penalties, costs, and interest, and sell the same and pay said taxes, penalties, costs, and interests, in the same manner as is now provided for in the seventh section of said act.

Mr. HUNTON. I desire to say only a word in explanation of this bill. According to the law of this District as it now stands, the collector of taxes upon real estate cannot levy upon personal property for those taxes, and has to look to the real estate alone for taxes upon real estate. The result of this law is that where a person does not choose to pay his taxes upon real estate he is not liable to have his personal property levied upon for them; and the real estate is sold, and under the decisions of the courts in the District tax titles are worthless. The commissioners, therefore, are unable to collect taxes on real estate unless parties choose to pay them. According to the provisions of this bill, where a person has personal property on which distress may be made it may be distrained for taxes against his real estate as well as for taxes against his personal property. I believe the law as provided in this bill is such as prevails in almost all the States.

Mr. BLOUNT. May I ask the gentleman from Virginia a question?

Mr. HUNTON. I will hear it with pleasure.

Mr. BLOUNT. Ought not the bill to go further and provide for the emergency created by the decisions that the tax titles are worthless?

Mr. HUNTON. In reply to the gentleman's question I beg to say we have a bill which meets that difficulty. This bill does not relate to that.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JUDICIAL PRACTICE IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEILMAN, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4566) to regulate the practice of the judicial courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the District of Columbia shall be permitted to commence all suits in all the courts of the District of Columbia without making the deposit for costs, as is required of other parties, and may prosecute all appeals, writs of error, certiorari, and have supersedeases without giving bail.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEILMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF CLERK OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMITTEE.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the compensation of the clerk of the Committee for the District of Columbia shall hereafter be the same as that paid to the clerk of the Committee of Claims.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to reserve all points of order on that resolution until I can hear some explanation of it.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say but a single word, for I believe when the question is understood by the members of this House they will concede the justice of this resolution. It provides that the compensation of the clerk of the Committee for the District of Columbia shall be the same as that of the clerk of the Committee of Claims. The compensation of the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations is $2,500 a year; of the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means the same; and the compensation of the clerks of the Committee of Claims, the Committee on War Claims, the Committee on Public Lands, and the Committee on Invalid Pensions is $2,000 a year each. There is no clerk of a committee of this House who has more onerous duties to perform than has the clerk for the District of Columbia Committee. Everything pertaining to this District is referred to that committee, and the committee, either as a whole or as sub-committees, is in session every day and nearly every night.

The committee have unanimously recommended that this resolution be adopted. It is believed to be just in every respect, and we ask for its adoption.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order that this resolution will require an additional expenditure, and should be first considered in Committee of the Whole. It ought to go to the Committee of Accounts anyway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER.) The Chair sustains the point of order, and the resolution will accordingly go to the Committee of the Whole.

INCREASE OF METROPOLITAN POLICE FORCE.

Mr. HENKLE, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4567) to provide for the increase of the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and empowered to appoint one additional inspector of police at a salary not exceeding $150 per month; one clerk at a salary not exceeding $100 per month, and as many additional privates or patrolmen, not exceeding one hundred, at salaries not exceeding $60 per month each, as may be necessary from time to time to preserve the peace and good order of the District of Columbia. And in the appointment of privates or patrolmen hereafter the said commissioners shall not be required to appoint only persons who have served in the Army and Navy of the United States and have received an honorable discharge therefrom.

SEC. 2. This act shall take effect from and after its passage.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the point of order on that bill that it involves an increased expenditure of the public money, and should receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and be printed.

PROTECTION OF POTOMAC FISHERIES.

Mr. SAMFORD, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4568) for the protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River; which was read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall not be lawful to fish with fyke-net, pound-net, stake-net, weir, float-net, gill-net, haul-seine, or any other contrivance, stationary or floating, in the waters of the Potomac River within the District of Columbia after the 30th day of May in any year.

SEC. 2. That during the fishing season, namely, from the 1st day of January to the 30th day of May in every year, there shall be observed in each week a closed season, beginning at sundown on Saturday evening and ending at midnight on Sunday night, during which time it shall be unlawful to lay out any haul-seine or float-net, or to fish the same; and all stake-nets and the leaders of all hedges or pounds, fyke-nets and weirs, shall be lifted clear of the water so as to allow unobstructed passage to the fish: Provided, That in the case of weirs it will be sufficient to remove a section of the hedging next the pound or pen not less that twelve feet in length.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person to take in any other manner than by angling or with the out-line any fish of the species known as black bass or salmon.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any person to have in possession or expose for sale in the District of Columbia, after the 30th day of May in any year, fish of the shad or herring species, fresh, under a penalty of $5 for every fish so exposed or found in possession.

SEC. 5. That any person who shall offend against any of the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon sufficient proof thereof in the police court or other court of the District shall be fined not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense, and shall forfeit to the District his nets, boats, and other apparatus, which shall be sold, and the proceeds of such sales and all fines accruing under this act shall be paid into the Treasury; and therefrom to the informer in each case where conviction ensues shall be paid the sum of $10: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit angling or fishing with an out-line, or to prevent the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, or his agents, from taking from the waters named, in any manner desired, fish of any kind for scientific purposes or for the purposes of propagation.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SAMFORD moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOTTERY SCHEMES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4000) to prohibit the publication of lottery schemes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That whoever writes, prints, or publishes in any way in the District of Columbia an account of any lottery or scheme of chance of any kind or description, by whatsoever name, style, or title the same may be denominated or known, stating when or where the same is to be drawn, or the prizes therein, or any of them, or the price of a ticket, or showing therein where any ticket may be obtained, or in any way giving publicity to such lottery or scheme of chance, or giving any other information concerning the same, shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to a fine not exceeding $100.

SEC. 2. That whoever vends, sells, or barters, or in any way disposes in the District of Columbia of any ticket, order, or device of any kind, for or representing any number of shares, or any interest in any lottery, "policy," or scheme of chance of any kind or description, by whatever name, style, or title the same may be denominated, whether located or to be drawn, paid, or carried out within or without this District, shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to a fine not exceeding $500, or be imprisoned not more than six months, or both.

SEC. 3. That whoever publicly or privately, in the District of Columbia, as owner or agent, establishes, opens, or sets on foot, carries on, promotes, makes, draws, or acts as "backer" or "vendor" for or on account of, or in any way concerned in, any lottery, policy, or scheme of chance of any kind or description, by whatever name, style, or title the same may be denominated or known, whether located or to be drawn, paid, or carried on within or without this District, or by any of the means aforesaid exposes or sets to sale anything of value, shall, on conviction thereof, be liable to a fine not exceeding $500, and to be imprisoned not more than six months.

SEC. 4. It is hereby made the duty of the attorney of the District of Columbia to lay before the grand jury of the District, at each session of the same, any and all newspapers printed, published, or circulated in the District, and other written or printed advertisements or notices which in any manner violate any of the provisions of this act, upon which the said grand jury may find such bills of indictment as may be justified; and upon indictment found to prosecute the same to final judgment; or said district attorney may proceed, by information in the police court, against any violators of this act.

SEC. 5. That section 1174 of the act entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature, relating to the District of Columbia, in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873," approved June 22, 1874, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment reported by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 4 of the fourth section, after the word "printed," insert the word "or;" and after the word "published" strike out the words "or circulated."

Mr. NEAL. I call the previous question on the bill and amendments.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Before the gentleman presses the demand for the previous question I would like to ask him a question. As a basis of the question, I will read from the first three lines of the bill:

That whoever writes, prints, or publishes in any way in the District of Columbia an account of any lottery or scheme of chance of any kind or description.

I suppose the object of the committee in asking the passage of this bill is to prevent the publication of these lottery advertisements in the District, or in papers of the District. But will not the word "publish" prevent news agents or others from circulating or distributing within the District papers that may be in fact printed in New York or Chicago or anywhere else outside the District? Has not the word "publish" a technical meaning—that is, "to give out?"

Mr. NEAL. In answer to the question of the gentleman from Illinois, I will state that the word "published," as I understand, would not in fact apply to newspapers actually published in other cities and circulated here. I will state the object of inserting in the bill the word "published." If the bill contained merely the word "printed," the actual printing might not be done in this District, but parties might go to Baltimore or other places outside the District to have their papers printed, and then issue them in this city as the place of publication.

Mr. REAGAN. I am afraid the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] is mistaken as to the effect of this language. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has suggested, the word "publish" in criminal law means, as I understand, more than the mere manual work of publication; it would apply to anybody who puts a paper in circulation; and under this bill, as I understand, any newsboy or newsdealer who may sell in this District papers published elsewhere containing these advertisements would be liable to indictment.

Mr. NEAL. It seems to me that the objection made to this phraseology is not well taken. In order to obviate the very objection which is made here, the committee authorized me to report an amendment striking out the word "circulated" which was contained in the bill as introduced, the object being that the bill should affect only papers printed or published in the city of Washington. The word "printed" has a technical meaning, the effect of which would be that the work must be done in this District; but the word "published" has a more general meaning and would include papers printed in Baltimore, but actually issued or published in Washington. For instance, one of the Sunday newspapers of Washington might in fact be printed in Baltimore, and if this bill contained only the word "printed" the publication of lottery advertisements in such a paper could not be punished. In that way the law would be evaded. The object of inserting the word "published," as well as "printed," is to prevent any evasion of this kind.

This bill is almost an exact transcript of the law of Ohio upon this subject. In that State the matter has been thoroughly discussed; and I have never heard of a news agent or other person being indicted for the circulation of newspapers published outside of the State. The law is construed as applying only to newspapers printed or published within the State. If this word "published" be struck out, we might as well let the bill drop; because if it should become necessary for the furtherance of lottery schemes the papers advertising them might be printed in Baltimore or elsewhere, while actually issued or published in the city of Washington.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I am in sympathy with the object of this bill as I understand it—to prohibit the printing of lottery advertisements. But it is a fact that in many papers published in different parts of the country, which come to subscribers within this District or are sold by news agents, these advertisements are found. This bill, if the word "published" be retained, will, I am quite sure, prohibit a news agent in Washington from circulating a daily or weekly paper printed, for instance, in Louisville, provided that paper contains a lottery advertisement. The news agent circulating or distributing such a paper would be liable to indictment.

I think I am not mistaken in my recollection as to the scope of the word "published" in this connection; and hence I called attention to that language. I apprehend that the bill could be so amended as to accomplish just what is desired and still not trap the innocent or unwary who may be engaged in good faith in the dissemination of newspapers in the District.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois whether an amendment providing that this act shall not be construed to apply to papers published outside of the District of Columbia would not remove the difficulty suggested.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I suppose it would.

Mr. BLOUNT. I presume the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL,] from the view he entertains of his own bill, would not object to such an amendment.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My attention was only called to this point as the bill was read at the desk. I do not intimate any positive opinion, and would not do so without examining the bill more attentively.

Mr. KELLEY. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois, in reference to the dilemma he proposes of the circulation of pernicious lottery advertisements by publishers elsewhere and of their patronage in the District of Columbia, that if we are to prohibit the local papers from advertising lotteries—and I think we are right in doing it—I do not see why we should give immunity to those who publish them elsewhere and come here and hawk them through the streets and keep them for sale on news-stands.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is the construction of the bill as it is understood by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KELLEY. Then all that lottery men would have to do would be to set up their presses a hundred yards beyond the District and flood it with their advertisements?

Mr. HAYES. How could you prohibit the circulation in this District of papers published in Chicago?

Mr. KELLEY. I do not say prohibit them. I say make it an offense to publish such matter here, and then it would be for publishers of papers elsewhere to determine whether it would be more profitable to them to insert lottery advertisements or to sell their papers in the District where such publications are prohibited.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I think all efforts on this subject do more harm than good. I see no reason why the papers of this District should be discriminated against whatever by having papers circulating here with lottery advertisements in them, as will inevitably be the case. It will only lead to confusion. There is no reason why the papers of the District should not furnish advertisements as well as papers outside of it. I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. SAMFORD. I ask my colleague on the committee, because he knows I opposed this bill in committee, whether or not he has considered the point that this bill does violate the first amendment to the Constitution, which prevents Congress from passing any law abridging the freedom of the press? What is his answer to that question?

Mr. NEAL. It may be a safe answer for me to say that almost every State in the Union has a law of a similar character on its statute-book.

Mr. SAMFORD. It does not prevent the States passing such a law, but it does prevent Congress passing any such law.

Mr. NEAL. Another answer is, that while Congress cannot pass any law abridging the freedom of the press, it can pass a law abridging its license. This is in no sense a violation of the freedom of the press, but it is to prevent a license which ought to be allowed nowhere.

Mr. SAMFORD. My recollection is that in State constitutions, where almost the identical words are used that we have here in the Constitution of the United States, there is an addition that there shall be no law abridging the freedom of the press, but the press shall be liable for the abuse thereof. But you do not find such words in this Constitution. It says Congress shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press.

Mr. NEAL. The Congress of the United States has not hesitated to make a law punishing polygamy, which is regarded by our Mormon friends as a religious worship. Congress has passed a law punishing that as a crime. Now, if we can punish that species of religion as a crime we can certainly punish this license on the part of the press as a crime.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. The same as libel or slander.

Mr. NEAL. Yes, sir; the same as libel or slander. We have a right to punish anything which infringes good morals or good government.

Mr. BLOUNT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio whether the effort he has made will not be a failure when the bill permits the same matter to be printed elsewhere and circulated in this District?

Mr. NEAL. It is enough for me to say I stand here to-day doing my duty as I understand it toward the District of Columbia. I do not know we can prohibit the circulation of papers printed outside of the District, but we can prevent the evil which is done here. The papers of this District are to-day the medium through which persons receive notice where they can buy lottery tickets. Any one can tell who will take the trouble to look at the papers, daily and Sunday, which are printed in this District that they publish advertisements giving information where tickets can be purchased for lotteries in Louisiana and Kentucky. They have something like two columns of advertisements showing who had drawn prizes in these lotteries. They are the means of debauching the people, and not the papers published outside of the District.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not complaining of the action of the committee. I have no doubt the gentleman is right, but my question is whether, when the committee has gone this far, it ought not to have gone further.

Mr. NEAL. Perhaps the committee ought to have done so.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 21.

Mr. ATKINS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays cannot be ordered on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. STEVENSON. On account of the confusion in the Hall it is impossible to know exactly what the bill is. I ask that it be again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That cannot be done except by unanimous consent, as the House is now dividing.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As no quorum has voted, the Chair orders tellers, and appoints Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, and Mr. NEAL.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 31.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the point that no quorum has voted waived?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Yes; we propose to have the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

So the previous question was seconded.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question first recurs on the amendment reported from the committee.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was adopted, and then the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. NEAL. For a question.

Mr. REAGAN. This bill provides that whoever writes, prints, or publishes in any way in the District of Columbia on account of any lottery or scheme of chance of any kind or description, by whatsoever name, style, or title the same may be denominated or known, stating when or where the same is to be drawn, &c., shall be liable to the penalties here provided. Any man who sells a paper in this city containing such advertisements is undoubtedly, as I understand the law, liable to indictment. And all papers containing such advertisements cannot be sold unless the party vending them lays himself open to these penalties.

Mr. NEAL. I do not yield to a speech.

Mr. SAMFORD. I desire to say a single word. I voted against the bill in the committee, and I did it on what seemed to me to be constitutional grounds. The provision of the Constitution is that Congress shall pass no law abridging the freedom of the press. The analogy which the gentleman alluded to awhile ago in answer to my question, which question he has never yet answered, in reference to the passage of a law prohibiting polygamy is not well directed at all. Neither is his remark that Legislatures have the right to pass laws to punish libel and slander well taken, because those are common-law offenses. Here the only power Congress has pertaining to this matter is in the first amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and that amendment says that Congress shall pass no law respecting its abridgment.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. NEAL. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I believe I have the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is bound to recognize the gentleman having charge of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. But I demanded the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the previous question does not cut out the gentleman's demand for the yeas and nays; if the previous question is seconded and the main question is ordered to be put, the gentleman's demand for the yeas and nays will be put to the House.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Is it in order to recommit this bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not pending a demand for the previous question.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 63.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to make a privileged motion. I think this bill should be amended, and therefore I move it be recommitted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is not in order at this stage of the business.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I understand it is in order at any time before the bill is passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Not pending the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. When will a motion to recommit be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. When the previous question is not operating.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will a motion to lay the bill upon the table be in order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It will.

Mr. TALBOTT. Then I make that motion.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 65, noes 72.

So the House refused to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. FINLEY. I move that the House adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 57, noes 78.

Mr. FINLEY. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 23 voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. FINLEY. But when I moved an adjournment, the pending motion was that the bill be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House divided on that motion, and the vote was announced, and the House refused to lay the bill on the table. The pending question now is on seconding the demand for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 77, noes 50.

So the previous question was seconded.

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the main question to be put.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be again read.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, and called the first name thereon.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion of the gentleman comes too late, the first name on the roll having been called.

Mr. TALBOTT. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The roll-call cannot be interrupted.

The Clerk resumed the call of the roll, which, being concluded, resulted—yeas 100, nays 84, not voting 108; as follows:

So the main question was ordered.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague from North Carolina, Mr. DAVIS, is paired with Mr. GODSHALK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with Mr. VALENTINE, of Nebraska.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. My colleagues, Mr. ROSS and Mr. BLAKE, are paired.

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague from Maryland, Mr. MCLANE, is paired with my colleague, Mr. URNER.

Mr. ROBERTSON. My colleague from Louisiana, Mr. ELAM, is absent on account of sickness. He is paired with Mr. DICK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. COFFROTH. My colleague, Mr. BACHMAN, is paired with Mr. BLAKE, of New Jersey. My colleagues, Mr. RYON and Mr. HARMER, are paired.

Mr. CABELL. I am paired with Mr. FISHER, of Pennsylvania. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. DIBRELL. I am paired with the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. ANDERSON. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. AIKEN. I am paired with Mr. WARD, of Pennsylvania. My colleague from South Carolina, Mr. RICHARDSON, is paired with Mr. RICHARDSON, of New York.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut, is paired with Mr. MULLER, of New York.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. BOYD, is paired with Mr. HENRY, of Maryland.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi, and Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, are paired.

Mr. DAVIS, of California. I am paired with Mr. KIMMEL, of Maryland. As this is not a political question, I vote "ay."

Mr. WHITE. My colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. O'NEILL, is paired with Mr. KENNA, of West Virginia.

Mr. BARBER. I am paired with Mr. EWING, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote "ay."

Mr. STONE. Mr. STARIN, of New York, is paired with Mr. GUNTER, of Arkansas.

Mr. MULDROW. I am paired with Mr. DWIGHT, of New York.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, (who had voted "no.") I change my vote. I vote "ay."

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. ROBESON, of New Jersey, is paired with Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. NEAL. I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and I also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I call for the yeas and nays upon the latter motion.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 94, noes 48.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the announcement of the vote on the motion to adjourn, by unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS, of North Carolina, for four days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. JOYCE, for three weeks, on account of sickness in his family.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, asked unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of George C. Harper; which request was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The result of the vote on the motion to adjourn was then announced; and accordingly (at four o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

By the SPEAKER: The petition of Edward Hanley, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ANDERSON: The petition of C. F. Morse, and other citizens of Kansas, for the enactment of a law enabling farmers and merchants to borrow money from the United States Government on real-estate security at 1 per cent. per annum—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, the petition of S. A. Hill, and other citizens, ex-soldiers of Kansas, for the passage of the Weaver soldier bill—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of citizens of Atchison County, Kansas, for the passage of laws preventing unjust discriminations in railroad rates—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ATHERTON: The petition of William Scott and 32 others, citizens of Licking County, Ohio, of similar import—to the same committee.

Also, the petition of J. Anderson and 30 others, of Licking County, Ohio, for legislation protecting the innocent purchasers of patented articles from suit for infringement—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BERRY: The petition of citizens of California, that the Klamath River Indian reservation, in California, be abolished and the lands thereof restored to the public domain—to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Papers relating to the claim of Edward M. Davis for pay for alleged damage to his land while occupied and used as a military camp—to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. BLOUNT: The petition of citizens of Macon, Georgia, for legislation to prevent interstate traffic in adulterated food—to the Committee on Manufactures.

By Mr. BOUCK: The petition of John Bannister, for additional pay for services rendered as a United States Army officer—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, favoring congressional action regulating interstate commerce—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BOWMAN: The petition of officers and students of Abbott Academy and of officers and students of Phillips Academy, Andover, Massachusetts, that the Ute Indians of Colorado be fully protected in their natural and their treaty rights, and that they may not be forced in any way to sell or leave their reservation—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, the petition of James P. Magee and others, for a survey of Malden River, Massachusetts—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BOYD: The petition of Joseph Mayo and 62 others, citizens of Peoria County, Illinois, for the amendment of the patent laws—to the Committee on Patents.

Also, the petition of Joseph Mayo and 60 others, citizens of Peoria County, Illinois, for the passage of a law regulating interstate commerce—to the Committee on Commerce.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the 12th instant, a letter from the Chief of Engineers relative to the improvement of the Exeter River, New Hampshire; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting a telegram from General O. O. Howard, commanding the Department of the Columbia, recommending certain modifications of the law relating to traveling allowances of officers and enlisted men; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RELIEF FOR SUFFERERS IN IRELAND.

Mr. McMILLAN. I present the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Paul, Minnesota, and ask that it be read. It relates to the suffering of the people of Ireland, which is a matter that I desire to call to the attention of the Senate.

The memorial was read, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Saint Paul, State of Minnesota, respectfully represents that the condition of the people of Ireland appeals to all Christendom not only for individual but Government aid to save thousands from the starvation which threatens them, and that such aid be afforded without delay. Your memorialists, therefore, pray that a liberal appropriation be made from the national Treasury to be applied to the relief of the sufferers, and that a joint resolution be passed by your honorable body authorizing the President of the United States to employ a public steamship of adequate size and capacity to receive and transport to Ireland the contributions of the charitably disposed among our citizens, as was done on a former like occasion, your memorialists being firmly convinced that such a vessel would speedily be filled to its utmost capacity with donations of food from every part of our common country, for the purpose indicated. Your memorialists are satisfied that they represent in this memorial not only the business community of Saint Paul but the wishes of all the people of the State of Minnesota, without exception.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

Adopted by a unanimous vote of the chamber, February 9, 1880.

HENRY H. SIBLEY,
President.

Mr. McMILLAN. My own State has been so prosperous during the past year, and our country has been so highly favored, that I regard it as a privilege to be permitted thus to express the sympathy of the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent for the suffering people of Ireland. I ask that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In connection with the reference, I should like to make a suggestion for which I am indebted, as I am for a great many other good things, to my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. ANTHONY] who sits by me, that sending the contributions in a naval vessel is probably the most expensive method that could be adopted. A naval vessel is usually so constructed that it is the least convenient of any means of transporting a considerable quantity of supplies. Therefore, I take the liberty of calling the attention of the Committee on Appropriations to the propriety, instead of providing for a naval vessel if they should think favorably of the project at all, of authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to hire a suitable vessel and transport the supplies of citizens, which would be cheaper and would effectuate the purpose a great deal better, in my opinion, fortified as it is by that of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. As the Committee on Appropriations may have to act upon the proposition, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Vermont, who has had great experience, whether this proposition meets his approbation, and whether he thinks this is a subject that Congress can appropriate for in the way asked?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not desire to yield the floor for the purpose of permitting any discussion, as I have further memorials to present.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but the memorial my honorable friend has presented is now pending; it is not disposed of. It cannot be disposed of without a vote of this body, and this body cannot take a vote until it hears any debate that is offered upon the subject.

Mr. McMILLAN. If the Senator from Vermont desires to express his views upon the subject, I am entirely willing that he should do so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no doubt of that. I shall not take my honorable friend's time more than half a minute, but it is due to the Senator from West Virginia that I should reply to him, as he has put a direct question to me. I should say, as at present advised, that I should most cheerfully vote for paying the expense by employing a vessel as the best way of carrying the supplies that citizens may contribute, as I have no doubt they would in great quantities if they could get transportation to Ireland, and in the speediest way. If the Senator will report a provision of that kind appropriating money to pay the expense and authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury or anybody else that he thinks fit to take the necessary steps, as at present advised I shall most cheerfully vote for it.

Mr. McMILLAN. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will bear these suggestions in mind, and that speedy action may follow.

Mr. THURMAN. I want to say a word in the same line with the observation made by the Senator from Vermont in regard to the kind of vessel to be employed, if a vessel is to be sent by the United States. The experience that we had in transporting articles to the Paris exposition proved, as will be seen by the report of the commission when that report shall be printed, that of all the expensive ways that can be conceived of transporting freight the use of a public vessel is the most expensive to the United States. The employment of our public vessels in the transportation of freight to the Paris exposition cost I do not know exactly how much, but my impression is more than double what it would have cost to have sent the freight by the ordinary means of transportation by merchant vessels, and the articles forwarded were delayed very much more than they would have been if they had been sent in the ordinary way, or by the charter of a vessel.

The same thing will be found, I believe, to have been the case when on a former occasion the United States sent a public vessel, freighted with breadstuffs, to Ireland, in the famine that then existed.

I hope, therefore, if it shall be deemed advisable to send a vessel, that our Government will charter a vessel, and not tear one of our public ships all to pieces, which is a ship not at all suited for freight purposes, but will authorize the Government to charter a suitable vessel, which could be in Ireland long before you could change one of our public vessels so as to make it fit for carrying freight.

Mr. WITHERS. In this connection, before further action is taken, I would call attention to a fact I observed in the newspapers the other day, where one of the largest milling firms in Richmond, Virginia, had offered a contribution of several hundred barrels of flour for the object of Irish relief, at a rate very much below their wholesale rates, and transportation was also offered to be furnished very much below the regular rates to Ireland by existing steam lines, and the committee on Irish relief in Richmond declined the contribution on the ground that they were advised that money was more desirable than flour or other food, and therefore they respectfully declined to accept the contribution which was tendered. If that be the policy which controls the committees who are in charge of the relief fund for Ireland, I think the whole of this proposed relief may prove unnecessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But that probably is not the policy which controls all the committees. It may control some, but I think the hungry people would prefer bread to money, if it can be given to them.

Mr. WITHERS. I merely made the suggestion upon a statement of that fact.

Mr. WHYTE. I very much fear that that branch of the relief committee to which the Senator from Virginia refers belongs to the political side of the question.

Mr. WITHERS. So far from it, they are distinctly arrayed in antagonism to any political movement.

Mr. WHYTE. I observe that there are two classes of contributions going into the relief funds from this country—one for the purpose of keeping up the agitation in regard to the system of land tenure that prevails in Ireland, to which a very large amount of money has been dedicated, and the other for the relief of the famishing in the west of Ireland.

I approve entirely of the proposition presented by the Senator from Minnesota to provide a ship for the purpose of conveying such provisions as may be gathered together to relieve these suffering people. I differ with my honorable friend the Senator from Ohio in supposing that there would be any difficulty about our furnishing one of the naval vessels to carry the provisions abroad. The Senator says that the vessel would have to be torn to pieces. If we believe all that we hear about the Navy, the danger is that most of the vessels will fall to pieces. I think that there are plenty of vessels in the United States lying up at the present time belonging to the Navy which could be utilized; and there are plenty of officers of the Navy, probably in Washington, or somewhere thereabouts, who could be utilized also in taking command of these vessels and earning their salaries, if not in fighting the battles of the country, in carrying the provisions which the people with full heart in this country are sending to the suffering people abroad.

That was the method adopted in 1847. We sent two vessels, according to my recollection, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy; and I would suggest that the proper mode to adopt now is to direct by a joint resolution the Secretary of the Navy to order one or two vessels to be put at the disposal of some proper persons, as was done in 1847, to convey the provisions to the other side of the water. I remember it was a matter of pride to all of us in this country who were engaged at that time in gathering money and in gathering provisions for the suffering people on the other side of the water, many of us having relatives there—it was a matter of pride almost as great as we had when our armies were triumphant, that these provisions were carried by our own vessels of war as messengers of peace, with the flag of the nation floating over that which was bringing to many a homestead peace and happiness and comfort.

I trust, Mr. President, that the memorial may be sent to the Committee on Naval Affairs, where it will be nursed, I am sure, most tenderly, and I hope something will come from that committee for the benefit of these famishing people.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I heartily concur with the Senator from Maryland, who is a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and if agreeable to the Senator who presented the memorial I hope it will go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, or to the Committee on Foreign Relations, instead of to the Committee on Appropriations. I hope that such a reference will be agreeable to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as I am advised, the reference heretofore made of similar communications has been to the Committee on Appropriations. So far as the memorialists are concerned, all they desire is that an opportunity be given to our people of having conveyed to the suffering people of Ireland the provisions which they wish to send them. I trust the Committee on Appropriations will take charge of the memorial and report a resolution without delay.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the memorial be referred to the Committee on Appropriations?

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McMILLAN presented the petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Paul, Minnesota, praying for a reduction of the tariff on steel and iron rails; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. THURMAN presented the petition of H. Miner and 75 others, citizens of Lucas County, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the patent laws so as to make the manufacturer and vendor alone responsible for infringements; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented the petition of F. R. Warren and others, citizens of Lucas County, Ohio, praying for the enactment of a law to prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discrimination in transportation charges; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WALLACE presented the memorial of G. B. Roberts, vice-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, representing seventeen hundred and eighty-two miles of railroad; the memorial of F. B. Gowen, president of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, representing eight hundred and sixty-nine miles of railroad; the memorial of E. C. Knight, president of the Central Railroad Company of New Jersey and of the Delaware and Bound Brook Railroad Company, representing five hundred and ninety-two miles of railroad; the memorial of F. A. Comly, president of the North Pennsylvania Railroad Company, representing eighty-eight miles of railroad; and the memorial of William A. Ingham, president of the East Broad Top Railroad Company, representing thirty miles of railroad, remonstrating against the reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented the memorial of John S. Barbour, president of the Washington City, Virginia Midland and Great Southern Railroad Company, representing three hundred and sixty miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EATON presented the memorial of G. St. J. Sheffield, vice-president of the New Haven and Northampton Railroad Company, representing one hundred and nine miles, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EDMUNDS presented the petition of S. P. Cheney and others, citizens of Dorset, Vermont, praying for the passage of a law granting a pension to Elizabeth Gray, widow of Paddock Gray, a soldier of the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of J. Gregory Smith and others, citizens of Vermont, and the petition of M. H. Buckham, president of the Vermont University, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the erection of a monument at Yorktown, Virginia, to commemorate the surrender of Lord Cornwallis; which were referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the memorial of Gilson & Woodfin and sundry other citizens engaged in the business of quarrying marble in the State of Vermont, remonstrating against the extension of a patent known as the Wardwell patent for stone-channeling machines; which matter is now pending before the Committee on Patents of this body. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the memorial of A. J. Cassatt, vice-president of the Northern Central, Baltimore and Potomac, and Alexandria and Fredericksburgh Railroad Companies, representing four hundred and forty-four miles of railroad; and the memorial of James Callery, president of the Pittsburgh and Western Railroad Company, representing forty-seven miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented the petition of Annie L. Quinby and others, citizens of Campbell County, Kentucky, praying for an amendment to the Constitution of the United States granting to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of William Snowden and others, citizens of Kentucky, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of J. J. Stephens and others, citizens of Boone County, Kentucky, praying for an amendment to the patent laws so as to make the manufacturer and vendor alone responsible for infringements; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hold in my hand a petition addressed to my colleague and myself, but evidently intended for the Senate of the United States, which I ask may be received. It is signed by W. H. Scribner and others, merchants and business men of Milford, Delaware, and prays for an appropriation of $30,000 for the improvement of the Mispillion River in that State. I move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERNAN presented the memorial of Le G. B. Cannon, director of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company, representing six hundred and sixty-five miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAYARD presented the memorial of Isaac Hinckley, president of the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore Railroad Company, representing two hundred and seven miles of railroad, remonstrating against the reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the petition of John Holmes and others, citizens of New Jersey, praying for the passage of a law by Congress to enable the owners of a vessel to hail it from the place nearest their residence and the customs district in which such vessel may be owned; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of William H. Remington and 79 others, citizens of Meigs County, Ohio, praying for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting any person holding the office of President or Vice-President of the United States for more than one term, and providing that the election hereafter shall be by a direct vote of the people; which was referred to the select committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the Elections of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois, presented the petition of Henry W. Lyons and others, the petition of Isaac F. Quimby and others, the petition of G. M. Wiggin and others, the petition of C. W. Willey and others, the petition of James W. Dutton and others, the petition of George B. Glover and others, the petition of Nathan P. Bennett and others, the petition of Charles Henry Bean and others, the petition of George W. House and others, the petition of Ephraim W. Wiley and others, and the petition of Elliot King and others, all soldiers of the late war, and citizens of Maine, praying for the passage of a law granting to soldiers the difference between the value of greenbacks and gold at the time of payment for their services; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VEST presented the memorial of A. G. Lloyd Leroy and others, citizens of Missouri and Kansas, and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of the mayor and common council of Saint Charles, Missouri, praying for an appropriation by Congress for the improvement of the Missouri River at that city; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JONAS presented the petition of the Union Soldiers' Association of New Orleans, Louisiana, praying that the seat occupied in the Senate by WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG be declared vacant; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BALDWIN presented the petition of A. Dodge and 80 others, licensed officers of steam-vessels, praying for an amendment of section 4458 of the Revised Statutes, providing for the payment of a fee for every first certificate granted to each master, chief engineer, and first-class pilot; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of E. R. Emmons and 210 others, citizens of Michigan, praying for the passage of a bill granting a pension of $8 per month to the survivors of the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, presented the memorial of Alexander Mitchell, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee and Saint Paul Railroad Company, representing fifteen hundred and twelve miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented additional evidence in the case of Richard Johnson; which was referred to the Committee on Claims to accompany the bill (S. No. 1009) for the relief of Richard Johnson.

Mr. WHYTE. I present the petition of James Hooper, of Baltimore, Maryland, praying compensation out of the unexpended balance of the Geneva award for the destruction of the bark General Berry. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That subject is before the Senate, a bill having been reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The petition will lie upon the table.

Mr. WHYTE. I prefer that it should go to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOAR presented the petition of the Massachusetts Woman's Suffrage Association, praying for the passage of a law creating a tribunal for the settlement of disputed questions arising in the count of the electoral vote; which was referred to the select committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the result of the Elections of President and Vice-President of the United States.

He also presented the memorial of the United States Board of Trade in favor of the passage of a law providing for the metric system of coinage of gold and silver as bimetallic money; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the memorial of J. S. Harrold and others, citizens of Indiana and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 3047) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to recommend a proper site for a union railroad depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4429) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Fair Grounds Association;"

A bill (H. R. No. 4465) to amend the fifth section of the act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878," and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4566) to regulate the practice of the judicial courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4568) for protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1075) to authorize Dr. Daniel M. Appel, of the United States Army, to receive pay for discharging the duties of physician to the Mescalero Apache Indian agency, New Mexico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3559) for the relief of L. H. Hershfield & Brother without amendment and to recommend its passage. I ask to have it reprinted, as there is a typographical error, to which I call the attention of the Secretary. A name is printed in the text "Russell B. Hamson," which should be "Russell H. Harrison."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The text will be corrected in the reprint.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 111) for the relief of the city of Macon, Georgia, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred a letter from the Secretary of War recommending appropriate legislation to enable the War Department to make the labor of military prisoners available for the support of the military prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, reported a bill (S. No. 1319) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the profits growing out of the manufacture of articles at the military prison at Leavenworth, Kansas, for the improvement of facilities for manufacture at said prison; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 613) for the relief of Jacob D. Jones, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. KERNAN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1160) to provide for celebrating the one hundredth anniversary of the treaty of peace and the recognition of American Independence, by holding an international exhibition of arts, manufactures, and the products of the soil and mine, in the city of New York, in the State of New York, in the year 1883, reported it with amendments.

Mr. HARRIS, from the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) authorizing the President of the United States to call an international sanitary conference to meet at Washington, District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WALKER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2326) for the relief of settlers upon the Osage trust and diminished-reserve lands, in Kansas, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The petition of Gallus Kirchner, of North Vernon, Indiana, praying compensation for stone used in the arsenal building at Indianapolis, Indiana, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, with various papers. In reporting back the bill (S. No. 757) for the relief of Gallus Kirchner these papers were overlooked. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs now to report back the petition and accompanying papers, and ask to be relieved from the case, as in the original instance, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That change of reference will be made.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 944) for the relief of John Grierson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1247) to amend sections 2262 and 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to the settler's affidavit in pre-emption and commuted homestead entries, reported it without amendment.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1180) granting a pension to Elizabeth Wolf, widow of John F. Wolf, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WHYTE. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 76) directing that ten thousand copies of the Medical and Surgical History of the War of the Rebellion be printed, to report it unfavorably, and to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. I call the attention of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] who introduced the joint resolution to know whether he desires to offer any opposition to its indefinite postponement.

Mr. CALL. I should be glad if there could be some suspension of action until it should be ascertained what is to be done with the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over under the rule, if the Senator desires it.

Mr. CALL. I ask that it be placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report of the committee.

PRODUCTION OF PRIVATE PAPERS.

Mr. SAULSBURY. During the investigation of certain matters referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, a question arose as to what extent the process of the committee could be used to compel the production of telegrams before the committee, and the committee adopted certain resolutions which they have instructed me to report to the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT The resolutions will be read.

The resolutions were read, as follows:

Resolved, That the telegraphic messages and the copies or records of the same in the possession of telegraph companies, their officers or servants, are not privileged by law from production and examination on proper process before a committee authorized to send for persons and papers.

Resolved second, That the order for the production of such documents ought to be so regulated by a sound discretion as to protect the privacy of communications not relating to the matter under investigation, and especially that the authority making such order ought first to be satisfied that the message sought is, if obtained, likely to be material to the pending investigation, and the order ought as far as practicable to describe with reasonable certainty the particular message or record.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. What action does the Senator from Delaware desire?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the resolutions be printed and lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. They will be printed and laid on the table.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that these resolutions are reported as resolutions to be adopted by the Senate. They are reported simply as the resolutions which have governed the action of the committee in a matter that has attracted public attention, for the information of the Senate and for the information of the public. I suppose, therefore, they should be printed and laid on the table, and not be placed on the Calendar. There is no action to be taken, I understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions will lie upon the table.

KANSAS SENATORIAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to submit a report.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, to whom were referred memorials relating to the election of Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, by the Legislature of that State, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The committee, under the authority of a resolution adopted by the Senate, appointed a sub-committee of its members, with instructions to investigate the charges and statements contained in said memorials. In discharge of the duty assigned them the members of the sub-committee met during the recess of the Senate, in the city of Topeka, in said State, and examined a large number of witnesses, whose testimony, together with the testimony of witnesses examined before the whole committee during the present session, is herewith submitted to the Senate.

The views entertained by the committee render it unnecessary to refer more particularly to the testimony, which will be found to sustain the conclusions of the committee expressed in the following resolution:

Resolved, That the testimony taken by the committee proves that bribery and other corrupt means were employed by persons favoring the election of Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS to the Senate to obtain for him the votes of members of the Legislature of Kansas in the senatorial election in that State. But it is not proved by the testimony that enough votes were secured by such means to determine the result of the election in his favor, nor is it shown that Senator INGALLS authorized acts of bribery to secure his election.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I ask leave to submit the views of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in writing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The views of the minority will be reported.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the reading of the minority report, I ask that the testimony be printed and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the memorials.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear the minority report read. We may want to take order about that.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The minority views will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were directed to investigate certain statements and charges touching the recent election of a Senator in the State of Kansas, respectfully submit our views as follows:

We concur in part of the report. We exonerate Mr. INGALLS from any complicity with improper practices. We also find that the result of the election was not accomplished by such practices. We think that, when the report goes further and finds that persons favoring Mr. INGALLS's election were guilty of such practices, it should in justice state what was clearly and unquestionably proved, that such means were employed in opposition to his election.

ANGUS CAMERON.
JOHN A. LOGAN.
GEORGE F. HOAR.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware, [Mr. SAULSBURY,] from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, asks that the testimony taken in the case be printed and that the committee be discharged. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. THURMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1320) for the construction of a building for the use of the United States at Toledo, Ohio; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ROLLINS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1321) to incorporate the Municipal Gas Company of the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McMILLAN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1322) for the relief of Thomas J. League; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HEREFORD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1323) granting a pension to Phineas Gano; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHYTE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1324) for the relief of James Hooper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1325) for the relief of Joseph C. Irwin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1326) to provide for improving the Missouri River at Saint Charles, Missouri; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1327) granting permission for the erection of certain statuary upon the buttresses in front of the sub-treasury building in the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. VOORHEES asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1328) for the relief of G. E. W. Sharretts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1329) for the relief of O. P. Wiggins; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BRUCE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1330) for the relief of Newton Knight and others, citizens of Mississippi, therein named; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LOGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 80) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to equip and furnish a vessel for the purpose of conveying contributions to the suffering in Ireland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. No. 1027) to provide for the establishing of terms of court in the district of Colorado; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (S. No. 1269) for the erection of a public building at Denver, Colorado, which was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I move that the amendment be printed and laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I beg to submit an amendment which I propose to offer to the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of United States volunteers and colonel of the Army. I ask that the amendment be printed and placed upon our tables.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the amendment read now, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported at length.

The proposed amendment was read, being to make the bill read:

Whereas a board of Army officers was convened by order of the President by special orders numbered 78, dated headquarters of the Army, Washington, April 12, 1878, to examine, in connection with the record of the trial by court-martial of Major-General Porter, such new evidence relating to the merits of said case as was then on file in the War Department, together with such other evidence as might be presented to said board, and to report, with the reasons for their conclusion, what action, if any, in their opinion, justice required should be taken on said application by the President, and said board reported that they had made a very thorough examination of all the evidence presented, and bearing in any manner upon the merits of the case, in addition to that which was before the court-martial; and also reported with entire unanimity, and without doubt in their own minds, with the reasons for their conclusions, that, in their opinion, justice required such action as might be necessary to restore Major-General Fitz-John Porter to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service; and

Whereas the President did heretofore transmit the proceedings and conclusions of the board to Congress with a message declaring that, as he was without power in the absence of legislation to act upon the recommendation of the report further than by submitting the same to Congress, the said proceedings and conclusions were transmitted for the information of Congress, and for such action as in their wisdom should seem expedient and just: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the President is hereby authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate to appoint, Fitz-John Porter a colonel of infantry in the Army of the United States, his commission to bear date January 21, 1863, with the pay and emoluments of that rank from that date, until he shall be retired according to law, or as hereinafter provided.

SEC. 2. That at any time after the granting of such commission it shall be lawful for the President to place said Fitz-John Porter upon the retired list of the Army, with the pay of a retired colonel of infantry.

The proposed amendment was ordered to be printed.

MONUMENTS OF REVOLUTIONARY EVENTS.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I offer the following resolution, and ask for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to send to the Senate copies of all acts of Congress and the Continental Congress, touching monuments intended to commemorate revolutionary events.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much would that cost?

Mr. BURNSIDE. About $25, I suppose, at a rough guess.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to amend the resolution by adding after the words "Continental Congress," "and the Congress of the Confederation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Which confederation?

Mr. COCKRELL. There has been but one Confederation in this country which ruled the country. "The confederacy" was not "the Confederation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if you refer to the old affair, that was the Continental Congress. Mr. President, I rather think the resolution had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe every one of the acts and resolutions of the Continental Congress as well as of the Congress of the United States since, is already in print, and any clerk of a committee could hunt up all of them in a very short time. It is rather taxing the Secretary of State, with his small force, perhaps a little too much to get together these acts if they are already in print. Therefore I should like to have the resolution go over.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I only desire immediate action because there is a case referred to me which I desire to report to the Committee on Military Affairs next Thursday. If I remember aright there are about half a dozen of these acts, a very small number.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the resolution had better go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection being made the resolution goes over.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to say one word before the resolution goes over. I want to say to the Senate that the force at the State Department is extremely limited. I know that committees of this body are waiting for official papers, without which they are unable to act, and the Secretary informs one committee that certain papers shall be forthcoming at the earliest possible moment which his limited supply of clerks will allow.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I withdraw the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution is withdrawn. The morning hour has expired.

DISTRICT STREET RAILROADS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was in hopes I should get an opportunity during the morning hour, (not having been in yesterday when the letter of the commissioners of the District of Columbia in answer to a resolution of the Senate about the taxes of street railways came in,) to move that that letter and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with certain instructions; and I ask unanimous consent to make that motion now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the letter and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia with instructions to inquire and report whether any, and if so what, officer has neglected any lawful duty in the matter, (by which I mean to endeavor to find out how it happens that $100,000 of taxes are not collected and paid into the treasury of the District, whether it is the fault of some officer, or whether it is the fault of the law,) and whether there is any legal obstacle to the collection of said taxes, and whether any further legislation on the subject is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, submitted on the 16th instant, relating to taxes of certain street railroads in Washington and Georgetown, be, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with instructions to inquire and report whether any, and if so what, officer has neglected any lawful duty in the matter, and whether there is any legal obstacle to the collection of said taxes, and whether any further legislation on the subject is necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. While I quite concur with him in desiring that the communication and accompanying papers may be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, I desire to inform the Senator from Vermont and the Senate that that committee is now engaged in investigating the exact question to which he refers, and I hope at no distant day to be able to make a report upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope my honorable friend did not suppose that my motion implied any censure upon or fault with the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. Of course not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I desired by it to call their especial attention, to make it their special duty, to find out how it is that while ordinary people pay into the Treasury their taxes in this District, which are somewhat heavy, these corporations which exist by the privilege and grants of favor of Congress, manage in one way or another not to do it, and whether it is through the fault of the District officers who do not enforce the collection of the taxes, or whether there is some legal difficulty in the way, or what the matter is.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection to the resolution, and it is agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the act (S. No. 1255) making appropriation for the removal of the remains of the late Major-General George Sykes, United States Army, from Fort Brown, Texas, to West Point, New York; and the joint resolution (S. R. No. 75) to print the eulogies delivered in the two Houses of Congress upon the late Zachariah Chandler.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent, as the morning hour has passed away, to take up the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia. It will take but a moment.

Mr. GORDON. Will my friend from Iowa allow me, before he takes up the joint resolution, to simply make a statement? After conference with the Senator from West Virginia, [Mr. DAVIS,] I find that it is agreeable to him, as it is to me, that his motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution to raise a special committee on the interoceanic canal was adopted shall be considered at some hour to-morrow; and if the Senate will agree to it, I suggest that at two o'clock to-morrow, if it shall be deemed advisable to close the doors, it be done, and the consideration of that subject be proceeded with.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent?

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to it, providing that in the mean time the bill now under consideration, relating to military bounty land warrants, shall have been disposed of. I shall object to it until that is done.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. McMILLAN. The regular order, I believe, is the consideration of the cases upon the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is; but the Senator from Iowa has asked unanimous consent that the Senate consider at this time House joint resolution No. 203.

Mr. ALLISON. It will only take a moment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be reported and objections called for.

Mr. GORDON. What has become of my request?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa objected to the arrangement, and unanimous consent is necessary.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GORDON. I understand the Senator from Iowa. I do not want to interfere with any arrangements in reference to his own bill nor do I want to interfere with any discussion of the land bill; but I simply made the suggestion to the Senate, as the question ought to be disposed of, that it would be well enough to agree upon some hour to consider the motion made by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; I withdraw any objection that I made. I think we shall have no trouble about the matter.

Mr. GORDON. Then am I to understand that the Senate gives unanimous consent to take up the question to which I have referred at two o'clock to-morrow?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will inquire.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, I do not mean any discourtesy by interposing an objection, but I shall insist upon the regular order, after we pass to the order of the day, until that is completed. I shall then insist on the order following, which is a case from the Military Committee that has been postponed from time to time and which has precedence of anything else, until that is disposed of. I shall insist on that.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from West Virginia that a motion to reconsider is a privileged motion and may be called up at any time, and they, therefore, virtually gain nothing by an agreement to take it up at a particular time.

Mr. GORDON. I will say to the Senator from New York that what I said was more in the nature of a notice to the Senate that I would ask it to proceed with this matter to-morrow. I did not put it in the form of a motion.

Mr. CONKLING. Either Senator can call up the motion at any time, and, then, if it be the pleasure of the Senate to proceed with it, they get all the advantage from it.

Mr. GORDON. Very well; that is perfectly satisfactory to me.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the bill called for by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WITHERS. I call for the regular order of business, which is proceeding with the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. This will only take a moment.

Mr. WITHERS. But if we yield in one case, we shall have to do so in another. The only proper way is to proceed with the regular order, the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I desire to give notice that immediately at half past one o'clock I shall ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Before the call of the Calendar is proceeded with, the Chair will take this opportunity to lay before the Senate some bills from the House of Representatives for the purpose of reference.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

A bill (H. R. No. 3047) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to recommend a proper site for a union railroad depot in the city of Washington, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 4429) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Fair Grounds Association;"

A bill (H. R. No. 4465) to amend the fifth section of the act entitled "An act for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878," and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4568) for protection of the Potomac fisheries in the District of Columbia, and for the preservation of shad and herring in the Potomac River.

The bill (H. R. No. 4566) to regulate the practice of the judicial courts of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS FOR PENSION CASES.

Mr. WALLACE. I move to take up the bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. WITHERS] has called for the regular order.

Mr. WITHERS. This bill has been reported from the Committee on Appropriations, and it is always considered proper to give preference to the bills of that committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks the Senate to take up at this time a bill, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Does that take precedence of the unfinished business of yesterday?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does by unanimous consent take precedence of everything.

Mr. WALLACE. I trust the Senator from Iowa will not interfere with the bill to employ additional clerks in the Pension Bureau to expedite pension cases.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. There is a matter not especially concerning me that comes over as unfinished business from yesterday morning; it concerns the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. McMILLAN] much more nearly than it does me.

Mr. WALLACE. Senators are all repeatedly asking information from the Pension Bureau, and there are not enough clerks there to give them the informations they need. This is a House bill which has been before the Appropriation Committee for nearly two weeks now. We want it passed now in order that the Bureau may have the necessary force to perform the work needed.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I will not object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

The first amendment reported by the committee was, in line 3, to strike out beginning with the word "that" down to and including the word "dollars," in line 11, as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ eighty additional clerks from or after the 1st day of January to the 30th day of June, A. D. 1880, at a salary of $100 per month each, for service in the Pension Department, and that he be, and he is hereby, authorized to rent available room and purchase furniture for the use of said additional clerks, at a cost not exceeding $13,900.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That there be, and is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during the current fiscal year, the sum of $36,000 for the employment of additional clerks in the Pension Office, but the salaries of said clerks shall not exceed the sum of $100 per month; also, for rent of additional office-room for the Pension Office, the sum of $4,900, and for contingent expenses of the office $9,000, making, in all, $49,900.

Mr. WALLACE. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to move to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "forty-eight" in the amount in line 14, and then in line 21 to strike out "forty-nine" and insert "sixty-one," so as to correspond in the sum total.

The purpose of this amendment is to give to the Pension Bureau enough money to perform the work that is required of it. The amount of $36,000 was fixed upon the basis of a pro rata of four months and a half in place of six months, a month and a half of the six months contemplated in the original bill having expired; but upon consultation with the head of the Department it is found that it is necessary to make the sum $48,000 in place of $36,000, and to make the $49,900 $61,900.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the proposed amendment. I will endeavor to state as briefly as I can what I desire to say in opposition to it. I oppose it more because of the means adopted to obtain it, and because of what I regard as a want of sincerity, not to say a violation of law, on the part of the Secretary of the Interior and his subordinates in this matter, than I do because of the amount of money involved.

The Senate will observe, first, that Congress made an appropriation for the current fiscal year for the Pension Office for the services of three hundred and seventy-nine persons—twenty-six clerks of class 4; fifty-two of class 3; eighty-four of class 2; one hundred and forty-seven of class 1; 30 copyists; and messengers, laborers, and watchmen, requiring $490,850 to pay those clerks and others on the permanent roll of the Pension Office for the year, at the rate of compensation fixed by law. I believe that was all the Department asked for; and Congress, under its clear authority, indeed in accordance with its positive duty, designated how many clerks there should be of each class, and how much should be paid to all, fixing the sum to be paid by the year for their year's work, as permanent officials of the Government. Because of the arrears of pensions law of the last Congress we gave them $48,700 more to employ temporary clerks during the current fiscal year. The law provides, in section 3678 of the Revised Statutes, that—

All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

A permanent force of clerks to be maintained till changed by Congress is one of the objects settled by Congress.

Section 3679 is that—

No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

Yet, in the face of these laws and of the appropriations thus made, a letter has been sent us by Mr. Bentley, the Commissioner of Pensions, which shows that he, by order of the Secretary of the Interior, has added a number of clerks to the permanent roll of the Pension Office, as I think in plain violation of law, and has created or arranged for a deficiency, if these men are continued to the end of the year, of $26,156.43 on the permanent roll, and he is so using the temporary fund of $48,700 given to him as to make a deficiency of $14,073, provided the temporary clerks are kept employed as he proposes until the end of the fiscal year.

It will be observed, too, by looking at the bill that all these facts were kept concealed from the committee of the Senate, and I think of the two Houses. It seems so because the House of Representatives was induced to pass a bill in these words:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ eighty additional clerks from or after the 1st day of January to the 30th day of June, A. D. 1880, at a salary of $100 per month each, for service in the Pension Department, and that he be, and he is hereby, authorized to rent available room and purchase furniture for the use of said additional clerks, at a cost not exceeding $13,900.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Kentucky by whom these facts were kept concealed. If they were kept concealed they were kept concealed by somebody, some officer of the Government.

Mr. BECK. The Commissioner of Pensions was before the committee on Appropriations of the Senate, and failed to state them to that committee, of which I am a member, when seeking before us the passage of the House bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. Was he interrogated in regard to those particular facts?

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I assume that it is the duty of any executive officer of this Government, when he comes before the committees of Congress, to tell what he wants, to state what he has done with the money they have given him. If he makes the impression on us that he is seeking to employ additional clerks, when in fact they are already in his service and he is seeking to cover up a deficiency, he is not doing his duty to himself or to the committees before whom he appears when he withholds such facts. He admits that $41,000 of deficiency exists now, or will certainly exist, and is provided for to exist at the end of the fiscal year with the force now employed before this bill passes, continued in their places. I deny the right of any officer of this Government to create a deficiency when the law is clear that he is required to conform to the statute making appropriations for the service in his charge.

But I desire before I go further to have the Commissioner's letter read, and then to say a few words about it. I ask the Secretary to read the letter which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor respectfully to invite your attention to H. R. bill No. 3258, and to the amendment recommended by the Committee on Appropriations in the Senate, and to the following statement of facts relating thereto:

There was appropriated for salaries in the Pension Office for the current year $490,850, regular appropriation. The act of March 3, 1879, provided for temporary clerks, rental, &c., $52,200, of which $48,700 was available for the salaries of clerks until June 30, 1880. The regular appropriation has been drawn upon monthly, as shown by the annexed table, "A," from July 1, 1879, to February 1, 1880. The amounts set down for the months of February to June, inclusive, are the estimates which will be required monthly to continue the present force on the regular roll to June 30.

The annexed table "B," from April 1, 1879, to February 1, 1880, shows the monthly expenditure from the fund for temporary clerks, and from February to June, 1880, inclusive. The amounts set down are estimates of the amounts which will be required each month during the balance of the year to continue the temporary clerks now on the roll.

It will be observed that there will be a deficiency in the regular appropriation of $26,156.43, and in the temporary appropriation of $14,372.43, a total of $40,528.86.

If the bill should pass the Senate as amended, it will operate to reduce the force of this office for the balance of the year below its present strength, when in fact it should be increased even more than the bill as it passed the House would do. The estimates for the bill as it passed the House of Representatives were presented to the House Committee on Invalid Pensions early in December, with the hope that Congress would make the appropriation before the holidays, so as to enable the Secretary of the Interior to increase the force on the 1st of January. This estimate did not specify the history of the expenditures, but measured the additional appropriation asked for by naming a specified number of clerks (eighty) of class 1, supposing the appropriation to be available from January 1.

It was in accordance with this estimate that the bill was reported to the House of Representatives before the holiday recess. The pressure upon the office had been so great that the regular roll had been slightly overtaxed during the first six months of the year, and the temporary fund had been drawn very low. With the assembling of Congress the work had greatly increased, and therefore the early call for the additional appropriation; and it was with the view of relieving the office as much as possible during the presence of Congress that the Secretary of the Interior appointed twenty additional clerks upon the regular roll early in January, trusting to the passage of the bill making the additional appropriation to enable them to be continued to the end of the year. The increase in the expenditure on account of the regular appropriation, for the month of January, over the preceding months, is chargeable to these additional appointments, and to the transfer of a few clerks from the temporary roll to the regular roll.

It is hoped that this explanation of the history of the two appropriations, taken in connection with the extraordinary demand upon the office, will induce Congress to make the appropriation according to the original estimate, and grant the sum of $48,000 instead of $36,000, as proposed in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, for the purpose of employing additional clerks. This will enable the Secretary of the Interior to continue all of the present force through the year and make quite a material addition thereto.

I have the honor to be,
Very respectfully, yours,

J. A. BENTLEY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Hon. R. E. WITHERS,
Chairman Committee on Pensions, United States Senate.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the letter just read shows several things which I think are in violation of law. I refer to it for the purpose of seeing whether I cannot aid somewhat in requiring the executive officers of the Government to comply with the law, and if they need additional force have them come to Congress and ask for it, instead of creating or fixing for deficiencies, and then saying that Congress had not supplied them with the proper force.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Is there any deficiency now? I understand not.

Mr. BECK. Let me make my statement. If the Secretary was to close the Pension Office to-day, he has not yet expended all that we gave him for the year; but that is exactly what the Departments always do when they seek to violate the law. They know the office has to be kept open; they know that if they expend all the money in the first nine months of the fiscal year they can say, "You must give me so much more or I will close the office." That is the favorite way of creating a deficiency. It is to prevent that condition of things from being produced in the Pension Office that I am protesting against their conduct.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. BECK. Let me answer the question. The law provides for and furnishes the Commissioner of Pensions with so many clerks, twenty-six clerks of class 4 at $1,800 a year; fifty-two at $1,600 a year; eighty-four at $1,400 a year; one hundred and forty-seven at $1,200 a year; and thirty copyists at $900 a year. That law means that he shall keep those people employed during the whole of the year keeping the office constantly open and that he shall not employ enough persons in the first six months to expend all the money and either close the bureau or say "I will close it and stop all business because you have created a deficiency." We have told him the number he shall employ, the prices he shall pay them, and that they shall be kept on the permanent roll as part of the regular force of that office; and yet, in spite of that, the Secretary of the Interior ordered the Commissioner to put twenty more men on the permanent roll and thereby put it out of his power, without creating a deficiency, to keep the clerks employed with the money that Congress gave them to the end of the year, and then clamors for a deficiency appropriation. That has been done over and over again, not only in this Department but in several others, until the committees of both Houses have protested against it and demanded reforms and obedience to law, and we ought to demand it here and now. We ought, in justice to ourselves and as a lesson to executive officers, reject every bill that seeks to force upon us what is called a deficiency when it is produced by a violation of law by the Departments creating it. The Commissioner says that if the number they have at work there now on the regular roll are kept to the end of the year at the regular prices, there will be a deficiency of $26,156 on the regular roll. I ask again who creates that deficiency? The answer is obvious. The Secretary and his Commissioner. How do they do it? By placing clerks on that (so called) "overtaxed" roll. Can any Senator tell what an "overtaxed roll" means?

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. BECK. I move to extend it for half an hour. I shall be done in five minutes. I move to postpone the regular order for the purpose of considering this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the unfinished business and all other orders be postponed.

Mr. ALLISON. For the purpose only of passing this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. For the pu. pose of passing this bill.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not object.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, the statement of the Commissioner to us is that the increase in the expenditure on account of the regular appropriation for the month of January and every preceding month is chargeable to the fact that these additional clerks were placed there by the Secretary. Let me read what he says:

> And it was with the view of relieving the office as much as possible during the presence of Congress that the Secretary of the Interior appointed twenty additional clerks upon the regular roll early in January, trusting to the passage of the bill making the additional appropriation to enable them to be continued to the end of the year.

I deny the right of the Secretary to make any appointments upon the regular roll, or to place these people there without the consent of Congress. We are the law-making power, not the Secretary or his Commissioner. I admit that the Secretary of the Interior has this power: that during the session of Congress extra clerks may be employed by any Department, only however during the session of Congress when it is necessary to answer communications made. These persons were not appointed because Congress was in session. Neither the Secretary in his appointments nor the Commissioner in his letter indicates that that was the fact; and if they had been so appointed they could not be appointed on the regular roll, but should have been appointed as extra clerks who were to receive compensation for the time actually and necessarily employed not exceeding $3 a day for copying, or $4 a day for other service. Therefore they do not come within that class of employés. They could not assume that Congress would be in session until the 1st day of July. But on the appointment of these men on the regular roll they were not employed as extra clerks, to be paid as extra clerks, upon any exigencies that the presence of Congress might require. I admit that in regard to the $48,700 allowed for temporary clerks he had a right to make appointments just as he liked, and he could have exhausted the whole fund in the first six months if he thought it best, because that was temporary and discretionary; but the increase of the regular force was made in plain violation of law. I see no excuse for it, and do not propose to indorse it.

By the act of August 15, 1876, section 3, we authorized the head of any Department when in his judgment "the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class or by a female clerk," to "diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade, and increase the number of the clerks of the lower grade, within the limit of the total appropriation for such clerical service." I understand he claims that is all he has done; but it is obviously not the fact. If he had only done that and had kept within the appropriation made by Congress, the $490,850 would have paid for all the employés during the year, no matter how he changed the classification. Instead of that, his own statement shows that he is creating a deficiency of $26,000 on the permanent roll for the year. So that neither under the head of extra clerks nor under the head of change of classification is he authorized to put people upon the permanent roll of that office, and employ them without law for it, and without appropriation previously made for their payment.

If Senators will look at the estimates of deficiencies for the year sent to us from the Secretary of the Treasury, who calls upon all the Departments for the deficiencies they may have on pages 12, 13 and 14, of that book of estimates of deficiencies, it seems he called on the Secretary of the Interior for the deficiencies he might have to send in, and not one word is said about a deficiency in the Pension Office, although this estimate of deficiencies is dated January 14, 1880. There are deficiencies set forth as existing in the Land Office; there are deficiencies in other branches of the Interior Department, but not one word is said about a deficiency in the Pension Office, and Congress has never allowed the Pension Office to suffer when it was fairly asked to give it necessary clerks.

But when a bill is sent to us as this was under pretense that they were seeking to employ eighty additional clerks—to facilitate and expedite the business of the office—from the 1st day of January to the 1st day of July, leading Congress to believe it was adding that much to the clerical force of the Department, when it turns out that $40,000 will be required of that $48,000 to pay the force the Secretary had already illegally placed there before the passage of this bill, then it is a concealment of important facts that is not justifiable.

Did not the House when it said he could employ eighty extra clerks mean that he should employ eighty he did not have? Then our committee changed the phraseology and instead of saying "eighty additional clerks" and appropriating the amount of money needed for that number of additional clerks at salaries not to exceed $100 a month, and changed it at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Pensions himself, because he intimated to us that he would employ people at $900, a lower rate, instead of making them all clerks of class 1. Did he not, I repeat, deceive us, if he had in fact all or nearly all these people in his employ at the time he was asking us to pass this bill? Now he writes a letter saying that he has already enough people in his employ to absorb $41,000 of the $48,000. When we said to him in committee, "you only wanted eighty clerks of class 1 from the 1st day of January to the 1st day of July—it is the 15th of February; before you get the bill passed nearly two months will have passed; we will make it $36,000, so that you can employ the same number for the balance of the year," it was never intimated to us that there was a deficiency to be provided for or made up. It turns out that the $36,000 we agreed to give him is insufficient for the force now in the office, and he had to write and tell us the truth about it at last: the money asked for is not to employ additional clerks, it is not to employ the clerks we are apparently authorizing him to employ, but it is to pay those he already has, and who have been illegally placed on the permanent roll which was fixed by Congress, and which no Secretary can lawfully change, to pay those he had already put there.

I oppose this bill mainly for that reason. I do not desire to cripple the Pension Office, but I insist that Congress shall require absolute verity, and want of concealment, and fair dealing from all its executive officers; and wherever they violate the law, I do not care under what pretext they do it, they shall at least come and tell Congress of the necessity which impelled them to do it, and not pretend that they are going to employ additional clerks with the money that we are asked to give them when they have in fact employed them before the law is passed. When we cut down the amount demanded, as we ought to have done, by the proportion required from the 1st of January to the middle of February, we find that we leave him with a $5,000 deficiency without employing a single person; and he has to come and tell us the truth, which proves to be that he is not going to employ more, but that he needs the money to keep those he already has.

I will vote anything in reason to the executive officers if they come and tell us frankly what they are doing and have done and their reasons. We have had too much of such concealment. When the Secretary of the Navy, for example, comes and tells the committee, as he does, "You gave me so much money, but it is a failure; I tried to do this; I want more money," we give it to him. If any executive officer will come and tell us the truth, and the reason he gives is good, we treat him liberally; but when he comes and says he is going to employ an additional force, when in fact he is going to cover up a deficiency illegally made, then I resist it until we get the facts from him, and shall require him at least to agree to quit such practices in the future.

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator from Kentucky whether, if this bill is not passed, the Commissioner will not be compelled to discharge these clerks, or otherwise create a deficiency? He admits there is no deficiency now, but he anticipates a deficiency. Is not that the condition of things, that he must either discharge them or create a deficiency?

Mr. BECK. I said in the beginning, and I repeat now, that unless money is provided, the Commissioner will have to discharge before the end of the year some of the clerks he now has, or have a deficiency of $40,000. But that is not what I complain of. It is that he undertook in violation of law to create a deficiency, and then undertook equally in violation of good faith to induce us to believe that he had not created a deficiency, and asked us to give him money to employ more clerks, when in fact he wanted it to cover up a deficiency for those he already had.

These are the grounds on which I complain of the action of the Department. As I said, I will vote any reasonable amount of money to carry on the Pension Office, but I want it put upon the true grounds. While I admit that during the session of Congress there is great labor imposed on the Commissioner, while I admit that the Commissioner is a very able man and a very industrious man—and I call upon him perhaps as much as any other Senator does—neither he nor his chief, I care not how honest or how great reformers they may be, shall induce me as a committeeman to vote them money upon grounds that are not absolutely true. I will require them to set forth all the facts. If they have committed a mistake let them come to Congress and tell us of it. We cannot deal with executive officers upon any other ground. We cannot permit them to get possession of the money of this people without telling Congress the exact facts as to why they want it, and if they have overdrawn the appropriation they should come and say so, and give us the reasons, and if the reasons are good we will stand by them, but they must not conceal the facts.

I know that during the session of Congress there are a great many calls on the Pension Office and that the Secretary has a right to employ extra clerks during the session of Congress. If the Secretary had simply done that, I would not have complained; but he did not do it. He has placed men on the permanent roll, not men to be paid $3 a day in some cases and $4 a day in others, as extra clerks, but he has placed twenty additional on the regular permanent roll before this bill passed the House, and in violation of the act of Congress, and if this bill passes there is only about $8,000 left to employ extra clerks instead of $48,000. They have, I repeat, employed enough up to this time to take $41,000 of the $48,000 he now asks. This was done some time ago, and it has been done, as the Commissioner says, by direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

I care nothing whether the amount is $36,000 or $48,000; I favor whatever is necessary for the public service. Let them have that, but let it be given in a frank and legal way. I felt it my duty, without reflecting on the action of the committee in regard to their action, to give the reasons I have for objecting to this course of proceeding, hoping it may tend to prevent a repetition of such things hereafter and may tend to make executive officers more careful how they violate the law.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, the House of Representatives appropriated in this bill $48,000 for eighty additional clerks, in accordance with the request of the Commissioner of Pensions made through the Secretary of the Interior in December, 1879. The bill in that form came to the Senate and went to the Committee on Appropriations. The $48,000 having been appropriated for the service from the 1st of January to the end of the fiscal year, six months, and a month and a half having elapsed before we received it, it was deemed necessary by that committee only to appropriate the pro rata sum needed to complete the work intended to be completed by the $48,000 appropriated by the House of Representatives. Hence we reduced the amount from $48,000 to $36,000 in the bill as reported. The Commissioner of Pensions ascertaining that this deduction had been made, complained and sent us a letter which I send to the Secretary and ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, PENSION OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1880.

SIR: In compliance with your verbal request for certain information in relation to the expenditure of the salary fund of this office during the current year, I have the honor to hand you herewith a table showing the number of persons of all grades who were borne upon the pay-roll on the 31st of January, both regular appropriation and temporary, the total number being five hundred and nine. A column of the same sheet shows the number of each grade appropriated for in the regular appropriation, a total of three hundred and seventy-six.

The employment of clerks in excess of the number, by grades, specified in the act making the appropriations is authorized by section 3 of the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenditures of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, approved August 15, 1876. The expenditure of a larger portion of the appropriation during one portion of the year than the average appropriation for that period appears to be justified by the exigencies of the service.

I am, very respectfully, yours,

J. A. BENTLEY,
Commissioner of Pensions.

Hon. WILLIAM A. WALLACE,
United States Senator.

Statement of the number and classification of employés in the Pension Office for whom regular appropriations are made.

Mr. WALLACE. This statement shows that there have been changes made in the grade of clerks. Thus there are more nine-hundred-dollar clerks than are allowed by the act of appropriation; there are more twelve-hundred-dollar clerks than are allowed by the act of appropriation. The higher-class clerks have been lessened in number, and the lower-priced clerks have been increased quite largely. This the Secretary of the Interior has the right to do under the act of 1876, which gives him discretionary authority, thus:

SEC. 3. That whenever, in the judgment of the head of any Department, the duties assigned to a clerk of one class can be as well performed by a clerk of a lower class or by a female clerk, it shall be lawful for him to diminish the number of clerks of the higher grade and increase the number of the clerks of the lower grade within the limit of the total appropriation for such clerical service.

The whole restriction that is put on the Secretary of the Interior is that he shall keep within the limit of the total appropriation. Up to this time he has kept within the limit of the total appropriation for this fiscal year. If the argument of the Senator from Kentucky be sound, then it follows that there must be an equal average expenditure each month for the employment of clerks in the Pension Bureau out of the amount appropriated for the whole year. The Revised Statutes provide that during the session of Congress the Secretary of the Interior or the head of any other Department shall have the right to employ extra clerks because of the additional amount of labor placed upon that Department during that period. The plain theory, and in my view the just interpretation, of the statute is that the head of a Department may increase the number of clerks for any given month if the exigencies of the service require it, under the sole limitation that he shall not expend more for that fiscal year than is actually appropriated.

Thus the whole thing comes simply back to this: whether the Interior Department, having an appropriation of $490,000 for the current fiscal year, of which four and one-half months are yet to run, may be permitted to apply monthly to the payment of clerks on the regular roll more than a pro rata share or average proportion of what the whole appropriation would be monthly during the entire year. That is all that has been done. True, if the amount applied for this month, or for the month of January, to the payment of clerks upon the roll be continued to the end of the fiscal year, there will be a deficiency, and the Commissioner of Pensions gives the amount that the deficiency will be. He shows this in two tables, which are appended to his letter of the 16th of February, which I trust will be printed with that letter, and the responsibility is on him to see that for the remainder of this fiscal year he keeps down to the sum actually appropriated. If he does so, no deficiency can exist; but to effect this he will be compelled to discharge many clerks. This I do not want, nor do I believe the country does.

Mr. President, the work in that Department must go on. It is stated to me as a fact, by the Commissioner of Pensions, that the total calls from congressional sources for information during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, were about eight thousand; that the total calls for information from Congress during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, were over sixteen thousand; and for this year, owing to the large increase of demands on them by the arrears of pensions law, it will be very much increased over the year 1879. So, then, there really is no reason for this complaint. There has been no deficiency to this time, and the employment of twenty additional clerks and placing them upon the regular roll, it seems to me, is in accord with the act of 1876, and with the provision of the Revised Statutes that gives authority to employ extra clerks. Certainly this service must be carried forward, and I am anxious to do what I can do to aid in giving the information that Congress is requiring from the Pension Department, and to prepare to pay pensions just as rapidly as we can pass upon them. Indeed I think it is our duty to give all the necessary force to carry forward this work just as rapidly as we possibly can. If we owe this debt it ought to be paid just as soon as we can settle each case. It is poor economy to say that we will not give that Department the clerks needed to adjust the accounts, to determine the facts and settle and pay the debt that we admit we owe to the pensioners of the Republic.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words on this subject as it is one upon which I have had some means of becoming informed by my service upon the Committee on Pensions of this body.

The Senator from Kentucky makes the charge, as I understand him, that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions, one or both, have either concealed the truth or told what was not true. That is a serious charge to make, and it ought to stand upon very sure ground when made. I find that this bill, House bill No. 3258, was introduced in the House on the 7th day of January of the current year if the bill I have gives the date correctly.

Mr. WALLACE. That is correct.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. That bill itself provides for the employment of eighty clerks from the 1st day of January, seven days before the introduction of the bill. It came from the Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House. Is it possible that they introduced a bill to authorize the employment of eighty clerks necessary seven days before the introduction of the bill that was to provide for their payment, without knowing that any of them had been employed already? Is it not more probable that the committee itself had been consulted by the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions and had been advised with by them in regard to this matter and that upon their statements to him that such a bill as this surely would pass these twenty clerks were employed? However, the question of veracity is not between me——

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Does the Senator wish the committee on the other side to speak for both Houses?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Oh, no; but I understood the Senator from Kentucky to say that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions had concealed from the proper committees of both Houses the facts necessary to be understood.

Mr. BECK. I know nothing about the committees of the other House; I spoke of the information furnished the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, of which I am a member.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I do not want to take the trial of the veracity of these gentlemen on myself at all; but if I am not widely mistaken the Committee on Pensions of this body were fully advised of what had been done, and if I am not mistaken also, the public were fully advised of what had been done by newspaper publications. I know that I had the knowledge personally of the appointment of these twenty clerks. The chairman of the Committee on Pensions can say whether the information was before the committee or not. I do not know as to that. I think it was published in the newspapers that it had been done. I know the introduction of this bill was commented upon in the newspapers, and I think the fact was stated that under the full belief derived from information had from the Pension Committee of the House that the bill would at least pass the House, twenty additional clerks had already been employed. I may be in error about that, but I think I am not.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state, as the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, that to my knowledge no official information was given to the committee as such as to the fact, although it was within the knowledge of nearly all the members of the committee.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Sometimes a thing known unofficially is about as well known as a thing that is known officially. The main object of my rising, however, was to go a little further than this.

Economy is a good thing when well used; but it may become gross extravagance and do gross injustice. That economy which cripples the public service in any of its branches or in all of its branches; that economy which prevents the work of the public from being well done when it should be done and as it should be done, is not true economy, in my judgment.

Now, the condition of the Commissioner of Pensions is a hard one. There are pending in his office to-day over two hundred thousand unsettled claims, and a large number of them have gathered there since the passage of what we call the arrears bill. There is scarcely a member of either House of Congress that is not receiving daily from his constituents many letters complaining in the most bitter terms of the inefficiency of the Pension Bureau and of the unreasonable delay in the settlement of claims before it.

Clerks in the Pension Bureau can do just as we can. The day is only twenty-four hours long to them as it is to us. They can work during the time assigned to them to work as we can; they cannot lengthen the twenty-four hours or do more work in the twenty-four hours than they can; and they are utterly unable within the time assigned them to do the work that is required to be done there. One reason is this: I am compelled to go to that office frequently, carrying letters from my constituents in regard to their claims. I never have been there when I have not found other members of Congress from one House or the other on the same business that I was. We had a statement the other day—I am betraying no confidence in stating it, because it has been printed—the Commissioner of Pensions stated before the Pension Committee of the Senate that from ten to twenty clerks of those he has in his office were kept steadily employed in answering the letters sent to him by members of Congress and the inquiries put by members of Congress; and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] says we have to wait two or three weeks for the answers before we get them. Now, I say it is hard, it is cruel, it is unjust to a public officer, whom I take pleasure here in stating I believe to be competent and faithful and capable, to allow him to occupy the position he does and permit the opinion to prevail as it does extensively throughout our country that the reason of the delay in sifting these claims is inefficiency in that office and not the absence of labor enough to do it.

It seems to me that if the Committee on Appropriations had been as industrious in obtaining information on this subject as the Committee on Pensions have been, they would not have cause to complain that they did not know anything about the employment of these twenty men. The Senator from Pennsylvania has differed with the Senator from Kentucky, the Senator from Pennsylvania believing that the law has not been violated. I hope that the Senator from Pennsylvania is right, and that the Senator from Kentucky is mistaken. At all events, Mr. President, the Pension Office needs these clerks. My own belief is that it needs many more. I am strongly inclined to believe that a change of the system in that department from the present system would be better than the employment of these additional clerks; but that is a matter now pending before the Pension Committee of this body upon which they have not reached a conclusion. But I do say that any delay in passing this bill, and giving to that office a degree of force that will enable it within some reasonable time to reach an adjustment of the claims now pending before it, is unjust to the soldiers and unjust to the officer who has charge of the bureau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, in the chair.) The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BECK. I now move to strike out of the amendment as amended the words from the close of line 17 down to line 19, which read thus:

> Also, for rent of additional office-room for the Pension Office, the sum of $4,900.

That, if adopted, will involve a change of the footing. The Commissioner has shown us by the letter he sent yesterday that it will require $41,000 to pay the clerks he already has and who are now, I assume, supplied with ample room; they are so far as I know. He has therefore only $7,000 remaining out of the $48,000 he asks us to give him with which to employ additional clerks. Taking $41,000 from the $48,000 leaves $7,000; and at $1,200 apiece that would not provide for much more than five men. To give him $4,900 to rent rooms from now till the 1st of July for five men, seems to me rather extravagant, not to say ridiculously absurd. If he has room for all the rest of the three hundred and seventy-nine he will find a place for these five in the rooms he now has. Our committee agreed to give him the $4,900 to rent additional rooms only because he made us believe that he needed eighty more men, intended to employ them, and needed room for them. Now, when it is developed that he is not going to employ more clerks, but is going to use $41,000 of the $48,000 now about to be given to pay those he already has, that part of the bill ought to be stricken out.

Besides, Congress has over and over again required great strictness in the renting of buildings, and insisted that we should know just what building was going to be rented, and what price was going to be paid, and the time the rent was to run before it allowed any of the Departments to go to rent buildings. This unlimited right to rent as the Commissioner likes, to pay this much money as he pleases, when there are no additional clerks to be employed, seems to me to be unnecessary and palpably wrong. I suppose the law has been violated in this regard also, and the facts concealed.

Mr. WITHERS. My friend from Kentucky is a little in error in some of his conclusions. Because an additional number of clerks has already been employed, it does not therefore follow that the whole number authorized by this bill have been thus employed. In point of fact, and according to the statements which have been laid before the Senate, thirty-three additional clerks in all have been employed when the bill contemplates the employment of eighty additional clerks. Therefore it may well be that additional room will be required to accommodate the eighty clerks provided for, in fact, or the forty-seven in excess of those now employed.

With regard to the point raised as to the necessity of this appropriation being given, and the location of rooms proposed to be rented for the use of any Department of the Government, I will state that full information on that point was laid before the Appropriations Committee at the time that this bill was pending for consideration by that committee, and the statement of the locality and of the amount required was then made known to the committee when this bill was under consideration. Therefore, I think the objections of my friend from Kentucky are not tenable, and that inasmuch as these additional rooms will be required in order to accommodate the clerical force for which this bill provides, the Senate ought to vote the amount.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say only one word to prove what I before said. The Commissioner, in his letter of February 16, says:

> The regular appropriation has been drawn upon, monthly, as shown by the annexed table, "A," from July 1, 1879, to February 1, 1880. The amounts set down for the months of February to June, inclusive, are the estimates which will be required monthly to continue the present force on the regular roll to June 30.
> The annexed table, "B," from April 1, 1879, to February 1, 1880, shows the monthly expenditure from the fund for temporary clerks, and from February to June, 1880, inclusive, the amounts set down are estimates of the amounts which will be required each month during the balance of the year to continue the temporary clerks now on the roll.

And these two tables foot up $26,156.43 and $14,073.03, respectively, making nearly $41,000 out of the $48,000 necessary to pay the clerks now on the roll; and if he has made any other statement showing that he will have an additional number of clerks to those now on the roll it must be a statement varying in fact from this.

Mr. WALLACE. On the subject of the number of clerks for whom rooms are to be rented, the statement furnished by the Commissioner of Pensions is very clear. The number authorized by the appropriation statute for the year 1880 is three hundred and seventy-six. The number actually employed is five hundred and nine. Under the authority given to the Secretary of the Interior to grade the classes of clerks, they have thus increased the number of clerks in the Department one hundred and thirty-three over the number actually given by the statute appropriating the $490,000. In class 1 one hundred and forty-seven clerks were appropriated for. There are actually employed but one hundred and twelve. In the class of thousand-dollar clerks there were ten appropriated for; there are actually employed forty. For copyists there were appropriated for but thirty; there are actually employed one hundred and sixteen, or eighty-six copyists more than were appropriated for. Now, these eighty-six people must have room to write; they must have tables upon which to write. Thus we see that the power given to the Secretary of the Interior to grade the force increases the number of clerks, and necessarily increases the necessity for rooms, which must be rented and the rent paid for.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Pennsylvania if this is asked for by the Commissioner? Does he claim that it is necessary?

Mr. WALLACE. He does.

Mr. TELLER. I shall vote for it.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I wish to ask my colleague on the committee, who has charge of this bill, whether or not the buildings are now rented and if it will require this amount of $4,900 for the balance of the year, and if part of it is not due? That fact will affect my action.

Mr. WALLACE. My information is, although I have it not officially from the Commissioner, that rooms on Twelfth street, adjoining the Pension building, have been occupied recently in view of the increase of clerks. They are now occupied, but were not occupied at the beginning of the fiscal year. The necessities of the service have compelled the Commissioner of Pensions thus to add to the accommodations for locating a number of clerks. He cannot put one hundred and sixteen clerks in the same space that he could put thirty. Hence the exigencies of the service compelled him to go forward and get additional rooms, and I, for one, am willing to sustain him in it.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, one word more. We have a distinct statute of the United States prohibiting any Department of the Government from contracting any rent, imposing any obligation on the Government for rent, without a specific appropriation by Congress after all the facts have been made known to us. That is part of the law of the land. Here is just another of the things that I complain of: that executive officers, under what they regard as public necessity, violate the statutes of the United States, and in the face of the law rent and occupy, or put us in a position where we are compelled to pay for, buildings that they are forbidden to rent; and then when they come to get the bills passed they do not even condescend to tell that they have done it, or that they want the money for that purpose, but pretend that they are going to employ eighty more clerks, when they have them now, and fail to tell us, "we have occupied property in violation of law," when they want the money to apply it for that purpose. What I desire, and what I am making this struggle for, is to require the truth to be told, and the whole truth, to the committees of this House and of the other, and that no executive officer, no matter how high he may be, shall take money from us under one pretext to be used for another purpose, or fail to tell us exactly what he has done. If he has done wrong, let him say so; and if he has done right, let us say so. I will go as far to condone anything that an executive officer may do when the necessities of the service required it as any man in this House; but I will not sustain an executive officer who, in defiance of law and by withholding facts, does certain things and then gets money for one purpose and applies it to another.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Kentucky, my colleague on the committee, has well stated many objections to the manner in which the information came to the Committee on Appropriations. I agree with him to a considerable extent. My impression is that the Commissioner, as far as he went, told the truth, and was willing, as I thought, to give what information the committee might desire and want. He stopped short, however, of telling the whole facts; or at least all the facts as they appear now were not told in the committee. To that extent I agree with the Senator from Kentucky. I think the Commissioner ought to have told us the whole truth. As far as he went, I must say he appeared to be frank, and seemed to give a good reason why the committee should allow the additional clerks. I have been favorably impressed with the Commissioner in his efforts to do his duty. I think he is an improvement on any Commissioner of Pensions that has been in office since I have been in Washington—a decided improvement; and I regret very much that the Commissioner did not go further and tell us all that was connected with this bill.

Mr. WITHERS. Allow me to interrupt the Senator just there. I think it due to the Commissioner of Pensions in that connection to say that he was under the impression that this information was given to the Committee on Appropriations, because he stated so in a conversation with me. I called his attention to the fact that this increase, the employment of these additional clerks, was not known to the Committee on Appropriations when the bill was under consideration. He seemed surprised, and said he was under the impression that he gave them that information. I indicated that he had not, and he expressed his regret; and it was in consequence of that information that the last communication was written, so that the Committee on Appropriations might be possessed of all the information on the subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think I have endeavored at least to treat the Commissioner of Pensions fairly, and I have no disposition to do otherwise. It appears to be a fact, however, that as far as the original bill as it came to us from the House was concerned, the Commissioner had little or nothing to do with it, for the amendments which our committee have added to it to a very great extent were suggested by the Commissioner himself. So I may say to my friend from Iowa that it must have been that the bill was considered, so far as the House considered it, without the aid of the Commissioner of Pensions. He could hardly have suggested the bill as it came from the House, for he said, as I now recollect, that it would not suit the purposes of the office.

Now, as to the rent question. My colleague on the committee, the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has charge of the bill and who has more information than I have myself upon it, says he thinks this item of appropriation necessary. That being so, I shall join him in voting the amount specified here. But it does appear a large amount for the balance of this year to pay $4,900 for rent for the few additional clerks this bill will give. There is something mysterious about that. But as the Commissioner thinks, and as the Senator from Pennsylvania, who has the bill in charge, believes from his information that it is required, I shall vote for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I do not know anything about the necessities of the Pension Bureau for increased clerical force. I find here a bill which authorizes the Departments of this Government an additional increase of clerks, amounting to about one hundred and forty-eight. I am fully aware of the fact that the bill granting arrears of pensions a year ago has thrown additional duty on the Commissioner of Pensions; but it looks to me to be a very extravagant expenditure when in one year we add to two Departments of this Government one hundred and forty-eight new clerks. I am under the impression that if the matter were left to be determined by the men who pay the taxes, there would not be such a necessity for enlarged clerical force. I am not inclined to vote for the bill on the information I have. I did not vote for the arrears of pension bill. I did not help to increase the burdens of the Commissioner of Pensions, and I do not feel disposed to vote out of the Treasury of the United States large sums of money to pay for such an additional force of clerks, and I shall therefore record my vote against this bill.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I have not had time or opportunity to examine closely this bill. I only know, therefore, that the bill proposes to give assistance to the Commissioner of Pensions. No man in this Government needs it so much, not merely on his own account, but because of that meritorious class in whose behalf he transacts public business. I apprehend there is not a Senator in this body nor a member of the other House but what knows this fact to be as I state it. I do not want to use strong language, but I cannot characterize the manner in which we are compelling the Pension Bureau to be conducted as less than an outrage upon those whom we pretend at least to believe the most meritorious people living under this Government. Every Senator who hears me knows that to be true, because every Senator is overloaded in his daily mail by applications to look after claims delayed from one, two, three, four, and sometimes five years in that bureau; and I have not once, but a hundred times, I presume, talked with the Commissioner on this subject, and his answer is just and truthful that he has not one-half the working force that is necessary to keep this business up even; and I know that to be true.

There is a false spirit of economy as well as a true spirit that can actuate public men. It is a false spirit of economy to save the clerks' hire, and leave people who have a right to have their business transacted promptly here to complain and die without the relief which they ought to have. I, for one, stand ready here to vote enough of clerical force in the Pension Bureau and in the office of the Surgeon-General so that each citizen of the United States, especially those who have been hurt and wounded in its defense, need not wait in penury and despair often from month to month and year to year and at last die without their claims being granted, simply because we do not give the office the necessary force to get up with the business.

The Land Office is largely in the same condition.

Whenever a proposition is made to increase the clerical force we commence talking about economy. I believe in economy as much as any man; but there are subjects on which I desire Senators to remember that it is proper to spend money and spend it freely; and surely one is to see that the business of the country is properly transacted and that no citizen shall have just cause of complaint that his Government passes him by. That is my notion about economy and I have but one complaint about this bill: it does not go far enough. It does not give enough of force and does not give force of the kind that is required, I fear. There needs a clerical talent in that bureau that can sift evidence and try a case on the proof—talent that can command far better wages in other places than this Government is disposed to give. The Pension Bureau is an immense concern in this Government; it involves a large burden, it is true, but one that I do not hear the people complaining of supporting, and the sooner we realize that we must get the business up that is now behind there the sooner we shall properly discharge our duty.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say, so that it may go on the record, that the Senator from Indiana has no sort of right to charge the Committee on Appropriations with any niggardliness or want of disposition to do what is right toward the Pension Bureau; and the debate which we have had, as far as I have participated in it at least, has not been on the score of any economy to keep pensioners from getting their proper rights. It has been based on the ground that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions were withholding facts from the committee that the committee ought to have been informed of, and were employing men on the rolls in violation of law, and that no executive officer had a right to do it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I fully concur with the Senator, and I did not understand myself to be criticising anything the Senator from Kentucky had said.

Mr. BECK. Then I beg pardon.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not so understand him at all.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Indiana is aware that so far as my knowledge goes neither the Commissioner of Pensions nor the Secretary of the Interior has asked in a single instance additional force where it has not been given by Congress. I speak so far as my knowledge goes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why, Mr. President, I think it has been a matter of notoriety in this Chamber for at least four years, ever since the pensions were increased and a new class of people were brought in, if not before, that after repeated applications in the way of messages and communications to increase the force in the Interior Department in order to get off these just claims rapidly, we struggled year after year and without any success that was at all commensurate with the necessity of the case to get it done, and it has always dragged, through the reluctance of some body for some reason, undoubtedly the best, and here it is dragging still.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. FERRY. If the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will allow me I desire to express my surprise at the remark which has just fallen from his lips, that Congress has always been ready to grant all in the way of clerical force that has been asked for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Is not that so?

Mr. FERRY. I get my information directly from the Commissioner. Forced to his presence by numerous letters such as those to which the Senator from Indiana has referred, to ask the reasons why applications had not been considered by that bureau, the reply always is, "I have not force enough to discharge the duties with which I am charged;" and then I have asked him, "Why not apply to Congress for additional force?" and his response has been, "I did apply, and Congress has treated me negatively on that request."

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think the Senator is doing the Commissioner of Pensions injustice. I think the Senator is mistaken, and so is the Senator from Vermont; and my opinion is that neither of those Senators can show a single written application to Congress asking for additional clerks in the Pension Office, that has not been granted. I speak now of this end of the Capitol. At any rate when I say that I do not know of a single instance where the Committee on Appropriations has declined to increase the force when asked to do so through the proper channel. Some outside persons may have asked improperly or talked about it; but I do not think either of the Senators can to-day show us a written communication or an estimate from the Interior Department asking additional clerks in the Pension Office that has not been answered favorably; and in this very bill it is so; they get all they ask.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, the Senator from West Virginia, with his characteristic skill as a fencer in debate, has put so many qualifications and ifs and contingencies and limitations to his last statement, that I am not absolutely certain that he could be convicted before a travers jury of being incorrect. First he speaks of an increase of the force in the Pension Office.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly. Are we not talking of the Pension Office? What other office are we talking of?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We are talking about the Pension Office, but we are talking about something else as well, if the Senator will listen to me a moment. The Pension Office, according to my recollection, or the Department of the Interior through which it speaks, informed us three or four years ago when the party of reform and all the other things that belong to that name got into power in one branch or the other of Congress, by one means or another, that the stumbling-block in the way of getting along with pensions was the fact that the information from the War Department respecting the medical history and the military history of each claimant (which I submit to the honorable Senator from West Virginia sometimes exists in the cases of claimants for pensions) was not forthcoming, that applications for reports respecting the medical history and the military history of claimants for pensions would be sent to the War Office and it would be months, and I think in some instances it was eighteen months before they were answered. Then inquiry was made at the War Department what that meant. They said it meant "Congress has cut down our force so that we do all we can and we cannot do more." Then there was a struggle to increase the force to a point commensurate with the necessity of the situation. That struggle failed. I do not mean to say that it failed totally, but where one hundred were wanted ten were granted, for instance. I only state it that broadly to illustrate the fact that Congress did not choose to do anything like what it was represented ought to be done; and I am very sure I am right about that.

Now, I do not mean to admit by any means that the Pension Office itself was not reported to be in need of additional force; but so long as the force there found itself unable to get on with business because what had gone through its office was waiting for further information, could not be answered, then an increase of force in the Pension Office would do no good, for the reason that it was blocked up at the other end of the line, to use a railway expression.

I am sure that my honorable friend from West Virginia, if he will look back the last four years at the letters and communications of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions and of the Secretary of War and the Surgeon-General, will find that if I have made a mistake in any way, I have made a mistake in understating the situation.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to repeat, so far as applies to the Pension Office, what I said before, that I am surprised at the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and I restate here my experience in my relations to the Commissioner of Pensions. I have made complaint to him, pressed by numerous letters of the class referred to by the Senator from Indiana, of which every Senator has like experience—and I listened with a great deal of interest in that regard to what that Senator said, because it was a recital of my own experience—I have made personal application, and the reply has been, "I have not force enough here to meet the demands upon this office." My response then has been, "Why do you not ask for more force?" And I have been told by the Commissioner, "I have asked, and it is denied me."

I have always been willing to bow to the majority of this body and of Congress, claiming my privilege to protest against the spirit of economy, so called, which has prevailed so much of late, and I confess it is not a just spirit, in my judgment. Against my protest and against my own vote I have bowed to the decree of the majority, and was unwilling to say a word when the Senator from Indiana was speaking in regard to the pressure upon him; but when the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of this body states in the hearing of the Senate that every application for additional force has been granted by this body, I must express my surprise, and I must say that that statement does not accord with the expressions of the Commissioner to me as a member of this body.

I wish to verify what has been said by the Senator from Indiana that I have been pressed by applicants who had waited year after year for their rights at that office. I have letters now pending before that office, and the only reason why they are not answered is because there is not clerical force enough to properly discharge its duties. When I am thus pressed upon the one side by just claimants on the Government, and upon the other by an executive officer who is hampered, tied by the economy of those in the majority here, I am compelled to express again for the third time my surprise at what has been dropped by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, whatever may be said of the past, in the present the Committee on Appropriations desire to give all that the Pension Commissioner asks. Certainly no bill has come from his hands and no request has ever come from his mouth since the 4th of March, 1879, that has not been complied with in word and letter. If previous to that time there was a deduction from the old force of any of these Departments it was with the consent and assent of the committees of this body. I need say no more. It is not necessary to go into any discussion of the question as to what occurred in regard to the reduction of force in the Executive Departments. Everybody on this floor must admit, and I have no doubt will admit, that there was a necessity for a reduction of a great deal of the forces in many of the Executive Departments. Differing politically, both Houses concurred in those reductions and the appropriation bills passed with those reductions, and the country approved them. Now there comes a necessity for an additional force on an urgent public necessity in one branch of the service. Both sides, it seems to me, ought to acquiesce in giving all that is required in this regard. For my part, I have stated twice already that I am ready to do it. I will vote all the clerical force that is needed in this department to expedite the settlement of these claims at the earliest practicable moment. We have recognized this indebtedness, we ought to settle and pay the men to whom we are indebted. It seems to me that is what this bill intends to do, and why we should be lugged into a discussion as to what has occurred in the past is, I confess, more than I can make out.

Mr. FERRY. I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania if the remedy for the past would not be prompt favorable action now to the demand of the Commissioner?

Mr. WALLACE. Certainly, and I am attempting to advocate it, and have been ever since I got the floor to advocate the passage of this bill giving him all he asks.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Now I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if anything that the Pension Office has asked has not been complied with by this Congress?

Mr. FERRY. I am not aware of that fact which has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. He ought to speak by authority on that. I have questioned it by what I have said. I have stated my personal experience and the statements of the Commissioner of Pensions to me. Now the Senator from West Virginia, the chairman of the committee who have this matter in charge, states that Congress has granted all that the Commissioner has officially asked. I leave the statement thus.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no, Mr. President; I asked the Senator himself whether that was not the fact. I did not state it to be so at this time. I asked the Senator whether it was not the fact that this bill does grant all that has been asked so far as we are advised in this end of the Capitol. I, of course, know nothing of the other end of the Capitol, and it is not necessary to know for this purpose. The Commissioner was before the Committee on Appropriations and I believe that the committee agreed to all he asked in every particular. That is my recollection.

Mr. FERRY. That may be the fact so far as the present application of the Commissioner is concerned. My statement was broad; it was that the Commissioner had applied to Congress for increase of clerical force, (and I speak now in the hearing of the Senators present, and I think I state their own experience, their personal experience with this office;) that the Commissioner has been tied by some one here in this body, at least by Congress, and this body composing a portion of it. Now, I say the Senator from West Virginia, as chairman of the committee, states that Congress has granted all that the Commissioner has asked. It is not my observation of the fact. The Senator states it; I do not dispute it; but I still hold the position I have taken that the Commissioner has applied to Congress for additional force, which has been denied him.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, we have certainly given the Commissioner by this bill all that he asked. He gets his $48,000, which he said would furnish him with all the help he would want from the 1st day of January to the 1st day of July. We have given him as much from the 17th day of February to the 1st day of July as he said would do him from the 1st day of January to that time. Therefore, he cannot complain of it.

But I have moved to strike out, beginning in line 17 of the amendment, the words:

Also, for rent of additional office-room for the Pension Office, the sum of $4,900.

I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan whether, in the face of the law, the Commissioner of Pensions has a right to rent buildings and incur liabilities, and ask us to allow him the sum of $4,900 for that purpose from now until the 1st day of July? We have given the Commissioner of Pensions all the money for clerical force that he desired. He now asks, in addition to that clerical force, the sum of $4,900 for the rent of additional office room for the Pension Office from now until the 1st day of July. He shows by his letter furnished to the committee that $41,000 out of the $48,000 that he asks is necessary to pay his present force from now until the 1st day of July, leaving only $7,000 to pay the additional clerks. There is a statute providing that no building shall be rented until an appropriation is first made by Congress, but I cannot place my hands upon it at this moment.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky if the Commissioner stated that the building had been rented?

Mr. BECK. They are now occupying a building; so says the chairman of the committee. A building is now being occupied, and I should like to know by what authority the Commissioner is occupying a building for which no appropriation has been made by Congress, and whether we are obliged to sustain all that he does in that regard.

Mr. FERRY. If that is a question which the Senator from Kentucky puts to me——

Mr. BECK. It is.

Mr. FERRY. I will state that I am not the custodian of the duties of the Commissioner of Pensions. I stand by the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, of which committee the Senator from Kentucky is a distinguished member. I am willing to abide by the recommendation of the Commissioner when from the lips of the chairman of the committee, the Senator from West Virginia, it is stated here upon the floor of the Senate that he is the best Commissioner who has held that office in the knowledge of that Senator. If that be the indorsement made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, certainly I am willing to accede to the request of the Commissioner, being satisfied that he would not ask, in violation of law, any appropriation from Congress.

The point to which I addressed my remarks was the clerical force, not the particular matter of rent, which is another question. I referred to the clerical force which is now deficient, and it has been so stated by the Commissioner. Upon that point I spoke; no other.

Mr. BECK. Then I have only one other word to say. I am not attacking the Commissioner's want of capacity nor his want of vigilance. I do not desire to be understood as standing before the Senate and attacking him in that regard. I have had communication after communication with him and have found him an extremely attentive, vigilant, and active officer; but when he violates the law I protest against it. I think very often the best executive officers are the men who most frequently violate the law. I think I see some of them now who from the very fact that they have determined to carry out purposes they think right, go on without waiting for Congress, without waiting for us to give them authority, and it is against that sort of action that I am protesting.

I am not complaining that the Commissioner of Pensions is deficient; I am not complaining that he is not doing his duty; but I am complaining that he and his superior officer, the Secretary of the Interior, are renting buildings in violation of law; that they are putting clerks on the permanent roll in violation of law, and are concealing the facts from us, instead of coming and telling us what they have done and stating the exigencies that required it. They are seeking to run the expenditures of that Department, instead of Congress managing it. That is the protest I am making against them, and I have had to make it over and over again against other Departments of this Government.

I said a little while ago that I believed the present Secretary of the Navy was the only executive officer of the Government who has always complied with the law, or who when he could not comply with it has come and told us that he has failed. He is the only executive officer of the Government who is allowed by the committees of both Houses to draw his own bills, just because he would confess when he was wrong and tell us of the mistakes that he had made. If the other executive officers of the Government will come and confess that they have made mistakes, or if they will say that the exigencies of the Government required this, that, and the other thing, that they believed it should have been done, and ask us to make it right, I believe the committees of this body, and of the other House as well, would make it right every time; but when they violate the law and ask us to employ eighty additional clerks, and give three or four thousand dollars to rent buildings which they pretend they are going to employ and to rent afterward when they have done it beforehand, then I protest against that sort of indirection and that sort of usurpation.

Mr. LOGAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

Mr. LOGAN. I believe the Senator stated that he thought the Secretary of the Navy was the only one who when he failed to comply with the law came forward and confessed the fact.

Mr. BECK. I believe so; as far as I know.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to know, then, if the objection to this bill is not because Congress is not made the confessional for all the officers of the Government?

Mr. BECK. The objection I am making to this bill is because the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Pensions are violating the law and defying Congress, and concealing the facts from Congress. If they violate the law and show that an exigency required it to be done, and come and tell us why they did this, that, and the other thing, which there was no law for, and hope we will approve their act because of its necessity, then I would sanction it for the reason I gave. But when they violate the law and conceal the fact from us, and ask us to give them money for one purpose to be applied to another, then I protest against it.

Mr. FERRY and Mr. LOGAN rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LOGAN. My speech will be very short. I think we have been highly edified by the discussion so far. All seem to be willing that this bill should pass. There are certain objections to that which has been done or has not been done; but as far as this bill is concerned, I hear no serious objection to it, nor has any been made by any Senator. Hence all the speech I desire to make is, let us vote and pass the bill.

Mr. FERRY. I share with the Senator from Illinois in what he has said. I have not occupied the attention of the Senate much upon this question nor upon other questions. At the same time I cannot allow the remarks which have been made to pass without calling attention to them. The Senator from Kentucky has just made the broad declaration that there is but one executive officer of this Government who has not violated the law in the execution of the duties of his Department. I think I so understood him.

Mr. LOGAN. That has nothing to do with this bill.

Mr. BECK. I think I said that, and perhaps it was too broad; but he is the only one that I know of who came before the committee when he did wrong and told it, and asked us to confirm his action. Going through the Departments, I know the Secretary of the Treasury has violated the law over and over again. I think the Senator from Michigan will agree with me that the Secretary of the Treasury has violated the law in doing what I think ought to be done. Receiving greenbacks for customs dues was a plain, palpable violation of the law. I think the Postmaster-General and his subordinates, in increasing the star service by thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars, have violated the law over and over again; but they never confessed it. I might go over the different Departments and show where executive officers have violated the law.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That the Secretary of the Interior acted without authority is shown by this bill.

Mr. BECK. In this bill of course it is shown that the Secretary of the Interior has violated the law by putting these clerks on the permanent roll and by renting buildings without an appropriation from Congress.

I mean to say only this: all I ask of an executive officer is to do the best he can and tell why he does it, to come and tell Congress the truth about the matter, and I will go as far as any man in this body to maintain all the Executive Departments of this Government in all their usefulness; but I will not vote them money when the executive officers will not come and tell the truth about its expenditure.

Mr. FERRY. I do not concur with the Senator from Kentucky in the broad declaration he has made reflecting, not offensively particularly, but still reflecting, upon the discharge of the duties of the several executive officers of the Government. I want to put a question to the Senator, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, charged with the appropriation of money in order to carry out the measures of Congress in the administration of the Government. Is it just that we should drive the executive officers of this Government to indirect action to accomplish what we ought to grant directly? In other words, ought we to place them in the discharge of their public duties where they are exposed to the reflection just made by the Senator, who is a member of the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BECK. If we do so, it is their business to appeal to Congress and the country, and not to violate the law.

Mr. FERRY. Have they not appealed, and appealed in vain? There is the point that I make.

Mr. BECK. I think they have not appealed in vain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 17, after the word "month," in the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, it is proposed to strike out the words:

Also, for rent of additional office-room for the Pension Office, the sum of $4,900.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the Senator in charge of the bill state precisely what room this is that is to be rented? What is the need of it? I make the inquiry for the reason that we have had some rather unpleasant experience about the hiring of buildings in this city for the use of the Government.

Mr. WALLACE. I can only give the information that the Commissioner of Pensions gives to us, that he wants these rooms for the occupation of the clerks whom we give him the money to employ.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Where are the rooms?

Mr. WALLACE. My information is not directly from him, but I understand that several rooms adjoining the Pension Office building, used before as a pension agency, have been occupied for a month or two by the clerks who were added by grading the classes. That is the information I have upon the subject; I have nothing further.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then, if I understand the Senator, his information is that the bureau has not undertaken in defiance of law to hire rooms in advance, but has only looked around and made contingent arrangements in view of having the authority of Congress?

Mr. WALLACE. No, I think the bureau have obtained rooms that were formerly occupied. Whether occupied under the authority of law by the Pension Bureau and temporarily vacated or not I am unable to say, but they occupy rooms formerly occupied by a pension agency, for the purposes required under the arrears of pension act, and for the clerks that were added by the gradation in the Interior Department before. That is the way I understand the matter to be. In addition to that, the Commissioner requires more room for the clerks who are to be added under this bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not doubt at all that for this additional force some additional room may be required; but I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that if the bureau has, without authority of law, and against the law, (which, I believe, is pretty strict on the subject of hiring buildings in this city and elsewhere,) undertaken to hire buildings in advance, trusting for an appropriation, it is a business that ought to be condemned in every way that we can, consistently with doing justice to these poor, crippled claimants in that regard. But I shall go upon the supposition, in the absence of specific information, that this is exactly what it purports to be, a provision for the future hiring of apartments, which the bill authorizes, and not a confirmation of any illegal act, if any has been done hitherto upon the subject. I can hardly suppose it possible that any has been done, but the remark of the Senator from Pennsylvania seems to lead rather to an implication that the Department of the Interior, like some other Departments a few years ago, is a little loose in respect of obeying the statute when it thinks that the public interest in its judgment makes it proper to disobey the statute. You cannot carry on a government in that way, in my belief.

Mr. WALLACE. I do not wish the Senator from Vermont to understand me as saying that I know definitely that the Pension Bureau or the Department of the Interior has rented and occupied buildings without authority of law. My impression is that they occupy these rooms under an occupation had originally by authority of law for other purposes, but I think the need for additional room is so plain that the necessity of this appropriation ought to be clear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, as amended, was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 32, after the word "pensions," to insert:

And the sum of $32,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the War Department for said purposes, which shall be available immediately for the purposes of the current fiscal year.

So as to make the clause read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint seventy additional clerks, forty for the office of the Surgeon-General, at a salary of $83.33⅓ per month each, and thirty clerks for the office of the Adjutant-General, at a salary of $100 per month each, and purchase furniture for the use of said clerks in the office of the Surgeon-General, at a cost not exceeding $1,000; and that said clerks shall be exclusively engaged in preparing and making reports to expedite the settlement of pension applications called for by the Commissioner of Pensions, and the sum of $32,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the use of the War Department for said purposes, which shall be available immediately for the purposes of the current fiscal year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 38 to 44, inclusive, in the following words:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry out the provisions of this act, to wit: $61,900 for the use of the Pension Department, and $39,000 for the use of the War Department; total, $100,900.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $4,800 for the employment of twelve additional clerks in the office of the Second Auditor of the Treasury, at a salary not exceeding $100 per month, for the remainder of this current fiscal year, to be available immediately, which clerks shall be employed exclusively in matters relating to pensions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I call, first, for the regular order, to keep the 5 per cent. bill, which I am so much for, on its feet; and, second, having called for the regular order, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, if it is agreeable.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not insist on that motion at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope we shall not do that; and especially do I hope——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable, as the Senator is aware.

Mr. ALLISON. I am aware of that fact, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to the importance of passing a little joint resolution which we had under consideration a few days ago, relating to the boys at the District Reform School.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there can be unanimous consent to take up the Reform School joint resolution, not to displace the regular order, I shall withdraw my motion long enough for that purpose; but then I shall renew the motion, because I feel it to be a duty. The Senate can vote it down if it does not want an executive session.

Mr. McDONALD. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order, being Senate bill No. 19, is before the Senate.

Mr. PADDOCK. If the regular order is before the Senate, I have some observations to submit.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I do not withdraw my motion for an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. PADDOCK. May I inquire whether in case that motion prevails I shall be entitled to the floor upon the regular order when it shall be next reached?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator at the proper time.

Mr. McDONALD. I desire to say that I shall ask that the bill now the regular order be finally disposed of during the session to-morrow; and with that understanding I shall give way to the motion for an executive session.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. When the Senator from Indiana speaks of disposing of this bill to-morrow, do I understand him to mean that it shall be disposed of so far as the present motion is concerned to indefinitely postpone it?

Mr. McDONALD. Yes, and the entire bill, if possible.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I would say to my friend from Indiana that I do not think that would be a wise thing to do, nor can we do it. There are a good many gentlemen who wish to express their views upon the bill, and there are others who are being enlightened by the debate as it has proceeded; and if it were extended a week longer we should get still more information. I for one am not in favor of settling this matter to-morrow. There are certain questions behind it that require some thought. So far as I am concerned, I only desire to explain my amendment to the bill and give expression to my views touching the general policy of the country with regard to the system of disposing of our public lands. There are some matters in this bill upon which I should like to inform myself that I have not been able to get information upon; one, in particular, is the amount of land warrants outstanding at the time the various States came into the Union. There is nothing in the published statements that I have seen to show when the land warrants were issued, and I for one should like to ascertain, if it can be ascertained, how many land warrants were outstanding setting apart portions of the public domain when each of these States came into the Union.

DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that House joint resolution No. 203 be taken up and disposed of. It will only take a few moments.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARRIS. There are two amendments suggested, I believe, by the honorable Senator from Vermont, to which I see no objection, except that they are amendments and make it necessary for the joint resolution to go back to the House of Representatives. My judgment is that the amendments only make a little more plain exactly what is the effect and meaning of the resolution without them; but if the Senator from Vermont sees proper, in view of these facts, to offer the amendments, I shall offer no objection whatever to them.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I feel it to be a duty to offer the amendments, first, because I think they are necessary, and, second, because I do not agree to the policy in a government that has two independent legislative bodies, that either one of them should omit to make a bill right, in a matter of substance at least, simply because it required the assent of the other. I think we are more liable to commit errors ninety-nine times in a hundred than to confer benefits by that course. I therefore move in the eleventh line of the print, after the word "week," to insert "from the 1st day of July, 1879," so as to limit the payment of this $2 a week from that time forward; and I make that motion for the reason that the $2 a week has already been paid to the trustees down to that time, and that I understand is satisfactory to my honorable friend from Tennessee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The other amendment is not one of my suggestion, but was, as I am informed, thought to be necessary by the officers of the Treasury in order to keep the accounts correct between the United States and the District of Columbia, and that is to strike out all after the fourteenth line, and insert:

For the present fiscal year, one-half of said expense to be paid by the United States and one-half by the District of Columbia, as provided by the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, providing a permanent form of government for said District.

So as to make the resolution read:

That to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry into effect the act approved March 3, 1879, which continues in force the thirteenth section of the "Act revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School of the District of Columbia," approved May 3, 1876, they be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the board of trustees of said Reform School of the District of Columbia the $2 per week, from the 1st day of July, 1879, for each boy committed thereto, as provided by said thirteenth section of the act of May 3, 1876, aforesaid, and the necessary appropriation therefor is hereby made for the present fiscal year, one-half of said expense to be paid by the United States, and one-half by the District of Columbia, as provided by the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, providing a permanent form of government for said District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After two hours and fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 17, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is requested to ask that Judge Gilbert, one of the justices of the supreme court of the State of New York, be allowed the privileges of the floor during the remainder of this week; also, that the same privilege be granted to Hon. F. C. Stockbridge, of Michigan.

There was no objection.

SAN JOAQUIN RIVER.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, presented the following petition, numerously signed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To the Congress of the United States:

We, your petitioners, respectfully represent that the San Joaquin River is the natural outlet to the counties of San Joaquin, Stanislaus, Merced, Mariposa, Tuolumne, Calaveras, and Fresno, embracing an area of 9,360,000 acres, more than half of which is arable land; now containing a population of about ninety thousand, shipping annually about five hundred thousand tons of grain, and receiving all that is necessary to supply a thriving agricultural and manufacturing community, including large importations of lumber. In consequence of natural and artificial obstructions the navigation of the San Joaquin River is both difficult and dangerous. We therefore petition your honorable body to make an appropriation of not less than $200,000 for the purpose of removing said obstructions.

WEST POINT, VIRGINIA, A PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. BEALE. I have been instructed by the Committee on Commerce to report back to the House for immediate consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4214) to amend and re-enact sections 2552 and 2553 of the Revised Statutes. The bill was read a few mornings since and printed in the RECORD, and I ask that the report be now read. It is simply a bill to make a port of entry in the Richmond district of Virginia.

Mr. CONGER. The subject-matter of the bill should be stated in the title.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is a bill to make a port of entry at West Point, in the Richmond district of Virginia.

Mr. CONGER. It should be so stated in the title. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. COVERT. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the bill is not before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has been notified that there are several gentlemen who desire to introduce bills for reference only.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no objection to that.

GRAND HAVEN, MICHIGAN.

Mr. STONE. I ask consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit to the House of Representatives any supplemental report in his Department relative to the condition and improvement of the harbor at Grand Haven, Michigan, with such views of its importance and necessity, and recommendations respecting the same, as may be deemed advisable by the Department.

Mr. CLYMER. I object to the consideration of that resolution at this time. Let it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LEWIS I. PUTNAM.

Mr. BREWER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4569) for the relief of Lewis I. Putnam, of Corunna, Michigan; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GRAND GULF, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. CHALMERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4570) for the prevention of the destruction of the harbor of the town of Grand Gulf, in the county of Claiborne, in the State of Mississippi, by the Mississippi River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF OFFICERS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. YOUNG, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, That a committee of five Representatives be appointed to investigate the present system of salaries, fees, and emoluments allowed to the officers of the several courts of the United States, to ascertain whether any, and if any, what, abuses now exist, or have existed, or may take place thereunder, and to report by bill or otherwise; that said committee have power to employ a clerk and the services of a stenographer, send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to examine witnesses, and to report at any time; and the expense of said committee shall be paid on vouchers approved by the chairman.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BENNETT. The Territories were not called at all yesterday for the introduction of bills and joint resolutions. I now ask unanimous consent that the call of States and Territories be completed this morning.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object.

Mr. McLANE. I ask consent to report a bill from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad.

Mr. BELFORD. I object.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business of yesterday coming over under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. GIBSON. I ask consent to introduce a bill for reference only.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am willing to yield for the introduction of bills merely.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I insist upon the regular order.

LOTTERIES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER. The unfinished business of yesterday, coming over under the operation of the previous question, is the bill reported from the Committee for the District of Columbia (H. R. No. 4000) to prohibit the publication of lottery schemes in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes. The pending motion is that of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NEAL,] to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. At the adjournment yesterday, as I understand, there was a motion made to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered, and a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. Upon the motion to lay upon the table I called for the yeas and nays. What I desire to ask of the Chair is whether, should the House refuse to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, and should then vote to reconsider the ordering of the main question, will that bring the bill before the House for amendment and further discussion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will answer the gentleman. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. NEAL] is to lay on the table the motion to reconsider. Should the House refuse to lay the motion to reconsider on the table, then the next vote would be upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered. Should that vote be reconsidered, then the bill would be stripped of the operation of the previous question.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I hope, Mr. Speaker, the motion to lay upon the table will be negatived.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

Mr. NEAL. There appears to be some misapprehension as to what the exact question is upon which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The SPEAKER. The pending motion is to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. And I hope those who are opposed to this bill will rise and give us the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 110, nays 116, not voting 66; as follows:

So the House refused to lay upon the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. LOUNSBERY. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. McCOOK.

Mr. SMITH, of Georgia. I am paired with Mr. WILBER, of New York.

Mr. SCALES. My colleague, Mr. DAVIS, is paired with Mr. GODSHALK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CABELL. I am paired with Mr. FISHER, of Pennsylvania. If he were here, I should vote in the negative.

Mr. McLANE. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. URNER, who is detained from the House by illness.

Mr. LEWIS. I am paired with Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If he were present, I should vote "no."

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. MULLER, of New York, is paired with Mr. WAIT, of Connecticut.

Mr. BARBER. I am paired with Mr. EWING, of Ohio. If he were present, I should vote in the affirmative.

Mr. McGOWAN. I am paired with Mr. THOMAS TURNER, of Kentucky.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, is paired with Mr. MONEY, of Mississippi.

Mr. MORTON. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. COX.

Mr. KING. My colleague, Mr. ELAM, who is absent on account of sickness, is paired with Mr. DICK, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPARKS. Mr. EWING, of Ohio, is paired with Mr. BLAKE, of New Jersey.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. ANDERSON.

Mr. TALBOTT. My colleague, Mr. HENRY, is paired with Mr. BOYD.

On motion of Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on ordering the main question.

Mr. KNOTT. Is it in order, Mr. Speaker, to move to lay this bill upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. KNOTT. Then I make that motion.

Mr. NEAL. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

Mr. CONGER. Let the bill be read before that is done.

The bill was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLOUNT. I desire to know when it will be in order to move to recommit this bill to the committee, in the event that the motion to lay on the table is not sustained by the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks, from the information he has of the status of the bill, that it will be in order on the next District day. This bill has been divested of the previous question, and if the regular order had been called the Chair would have recognized the demand, and the bill would have gone over.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I make that point.

The SPEAKER. It is too late, as the motion to lay upon the table has been made and the yeas and nays demanded upon that.

Mr. CONGER. The question was not put.

The SPEAKER. Yes; the yeas and nays were called by the order of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CONGER. That was on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is mistaken. Without objection, the Chair entertained the motion to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. NEAL. And I demanded the yeas and nays on that motion.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Ohio rose and demanded the yeas and nays on that motion. The gentleman from Michigan himself then demanded the reading of the bill, which was in the nature of further consideration.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Rhode Island. I made the point at the only opportunity I had.

The SPEAKER. It is now too late. The pending question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 104, nays 119, not voting 69; as follows:

Mr. BARBER. I am paired with Mr. EWING, of Ohio. If he were here, I should vote "no."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. JOYCE is paired with Mr. MONEY.

Mr. COVERT. I am paired with the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. ANDERSON.

On motion of Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order that this bill should go over to next District day, and call for the regular order.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is called for, and the bill goes over to the next District day.

The morning hour begins at thirty minutes past one o'clock, and the House resumes the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, being the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and regulating the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875. The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. KNOTT,] the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, has the floor.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman who occupied the last morning hour, that in the present advanced state of civilization corporations are sometimes not only convenient but necessary, especially in the prosecution of enterprises requiring the employment of very large capital, yet it seems to me that if there is anything in our social or political condition which should challenge the serious consideration of American statesmen of all parties it is the extraordinary multiplication and enormous aggrandizement of such institutions in this country. Look around you, sir! You find them on every hand, organized for every conceivable purpose that cupidity or caprice can suggest. Turn which way we will, we are confronted by these ideal entities, these incorporeal, intangible faculties, these viewless, bloodless, soulless beings whom an omnipotent God never created, and for whom there is no provision in the plan of salvation. [Laughter.]

Every avenue of active enterprise is crowded with them. Whether on the land or on the sea, in the mine or the manufactory, we find them arraying the merciless arm of consolidated capital against the overmatched and overtaxed tissues of individual energy and unorganized labor.

They have even invaded the sanctuary and made merchandise of the priceless comforts of religion. The rage for corporate privileges has become so prevalent that the Young Men's Christian Association can scarcely hold a prayer meeting without an act of Congress or a charter from a State Legislature authorizing them "to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded." [Laughter.]

Instead of the old-fashioned, plain-spoken herald of the cross, proclaiming to a sin-stricken world the gospel condition, "Except ye repent ye shall all likewise perish," we find some sleek, psalm-singing sybarite, who "has stolen the livery of heaven to serve the devil in," employed at a salary of twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars a year, to soothe the somnolent stockholders of an incorporated church with assurances that there is no hell.

To illustrate the magnitude as well as the power of some of these artificial persons, sir, I might mention more than one whose business is coextensive with our entire country, and whose active agencies are to be found in almost every city, town, and village from the Bay of Fundy to the Golden Gate, and from the mouth of the Mississippi to "the Zenith City of the unsalted seas." Or, if that would not suffice, I could instance twelve others, commanding the energies of an army of employés more than five times as large as the entire military force of the United States, and controlling an aggregate capital of over $3,000,000,000.

One of these corporate yet incorporeal monsters, like an enormous octopus, has stretched its omniverous tentacles into eleven States of this Union, and controls to-day over six thousand miles of railway, and more than four hundred million dollars' worth of property, besides a traffic exceeding the entire foreign commerce of the United States, while the magnitude of its financial operations is second alone to those of the Government itself.

I am perfectly aware, however, sir, that Congress has no power to prevent the several States from multiplying such institutions at pleasure. There is no check upon their fecundity in that regard but the prudence of their own people. Their Legislatures may continue to spawn them in shoals until they outnumber the frogs and lice that swarmed upon Egypt in the days of Pharaoh, yet Congress has no authority to strangle a single one of the pestilent brood.

Nay, more, sir, they may continue to gorge themselves with the voracity of the horse-leech upon the hard-won fruits of human toil; they may even turn, like the hell-hounds described by Milton in his interview between Satan, Sin, and Death at the gate of Pandemonium, and batten upon the lascivious wombs which gave them birth; they may raven upon the States which created them until, like the living but loathsome carcass of the tyrant Sylla, they are literally devoured by the vermin bred from their own putrescence; yet we have no authority here to disturb a single one of these parasites upon the body-politic in the exerise of any faculty with which it was endowed by the act of its creation.

But, sir, there is one thing we can do, which we ought to do, and which it is proposed to, at least partially, accomplish by the passage of the bill under consideration. We can deprive them of the extraordinary privileges which have been conferred upon them by judge-made law in utter defiance of the limitations of the Constitution.

It is well understood by every one, sir, lawyer and layman, that all controversies between citizens of the same State, not arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States or treaties made under their authority, nor involving the title to land claimed under grants from different States, are wisely left to be determined in their domestic forums where justice can be speedily and economically administered according to the laws of their domicile. While this is true, there is perhaps not a State in this Union in which, either under the comity of nations or by special license, there are not hordes of foreign corporations engaged in the daily transaction of business, involving from a few hundreds to as many millions of dollars, and all of them as completely protected by the laws of the States in which such business is transacted as their own citizens are or can be; and why the adjustment of their rights and liabilities arising under those laws should not be committed exclusively to the tribunals of the States of whose generous sufferance they voluntarily avail themselves for their own emolument is something that no just mind can determine. Yet, sir, if one of those corporations should have a cause of action against a citizen arising out of a transaction under the laws of his own State, and within its limits, and where a perfect remedy may be had, it can choose its own forum. It may proceed against him in his home tribunals, or drag him off to a circuit court of the United States either in his own State, or in any other State in which he may be found, where the costs of the proceedings will probably exceed the original demand, even if the unlucky defendant should be fortunate enough to secure the attendance of his witnesses at all. On the other hand, should a citizen sue one of these corporations in a State court upon any demand however just, or however urgent his necessities may be for its speedy adjustment, the defendant may upon the merest pretext have the cause removed into the circuit court of the United States, perhaps hundreds of miles away, where the docket is probably already crowded, and where he must either abandon his suit altogether, compromise at a ruinous sacrifice, or have his right determined at an enormous expense and after the most harassing and frequently disastrous delays.

A number of the States have endeavored to correct this most unjust and oppressive evil, by prescribing it as a condition upon which foreign corporations shall be permitted to carry on business within their limits that all controversies with their own citizens growing out of such business shall be determined by their own courts, but in vain; for the Supreme Court of the United States, after having repeatedly decided that a State has a perfect right to exclude a foreign corporation from its limits altogether, has declared that such a condition upon its admission is void for repugnance to the Constitution.

But this is not all, sir. There are constant and growing complaints that in some localities the circuit courts of the United States are literally overrun with business; that their dockets have been crowded for years, while causes are rapidly accumulating upon them, resulting in ruinous delays and enormous expense to the Government, as well as to suitors and litigants. Take, for instance, the State of Iowa, where on the 1st day of July last there were pending upon the dockets of the circuit and district courts of the United States nine hundred and fifty-eight civil causes—a greater number, perhaps, in proportion to population than in any other State in the Union. I recently asked an intelligent lawyer from that State how he accounted for this anomalous condition of affairs.

Why, sir—

Said he—

Iowa is gridironed with railroads under the control and management of foreign corporations; and besides, there is an active and extensive business done in that State by foreign insurance companies and other corporations, and in a large majority of instances suits between those corporations and private citizens are either instituted originally in the circuit court of the United States or carried into that court by removal from the courts of the State.

I have had no means of verifying this explanation by an actual inspection of the docket, but it seems to be entirely rational, and is doubtless true of other States where a similar condition of affairs appears to exist.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Did your informant at the same time tell you that over seven hundred of those cases were brought for violation of drive-well patent claims, a swindling operation, and that no such condition of the docket ever existed before?

Mr. KNOTT. No, sir. I have given the only explanation I have.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. That is the fact.

Mr. KNOTT. But, sir, a more striking illustration of the evil of opening the doors of the Federal judiciary to this class of suitors and litigants could not be found anywhere than in the present condition of the business before the Supreme Court. That court is nearly three years behind its docket, and the Attorney-General informs us that up to the 20th of November last a thousand and ninety new cases had been placed upon that of the current term. Of these about one-fifth are causes in which the United States are interested, and as to the remainder, I am prepared to say from a personal inspection of the calendar that nearly one-half of them are those in which corporations of various kinds are parties, plaintiff or defendant.

How many of these involve controversies arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made under their authority, or the title to lands claimed under grants from different States, I am unable to say, but I presume there are very few, if any. I undertake to say, however, sir, that if the cognizance of controversies to which corporations are parties were placed back precisely where the framers of the Constitution left it, the business before the Supreme Court would be diminished fully one-third, if not one-half, while that in some of the circuit courts would be reduced in a still greater proportion. In some instances perhaps as much as three-fourths, or four-fifths.

But, sir, I favor a restriction of the jurisdiction assumed by the Federal courts in such cases for other and graver reasons than these. I favor it upon broader grounds than any contemplated in this bill. I favor it because in my judgment it is utterly impossible for any court of the United States to take cognizance of any cause to which a corporation is a party without usurping authority nowhere conferred upon them in the Constitution, unless such cause arises under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made under their authority, or is within their admiralty or maritime jurisdiction.

I am fully aware of the nature of the ground upon which I stand, and I have not taken it without mature deliberation. I know that the courts of the United States, circuit and Supreme, have held the contrary doctrine for over seventy years, yet I do not hesitate to say that in attempting to justify their assumption of jurisdiction in such cases "they have not only contravened all the known definitions and adjudications with respect to the nature of corporations, but they have repudiated the doctrines of the civilians as to the import of the term subject or citizen, and repealed at the same time that restriction in the Constitution which limited their jurisdiction to controversies between citizens of different States."

In saying this, sir, I can not be impeached of any want of a proper respect for the Federal judiciary in any of its branches, for I but repeat the exact language of one of the ablest jurists and purest patriots that ever adorned the supreme bench of our country. Nor do I affect any of that servile deference to judicial opinion which would shield it from legitimate criticism here or elsewhere. I have precisely the same respect for the judiciary that I have for any other department of a great government designed to protect the interests of a free people under the limitations of a written constitution; but I know of no obligation that requires me, either as a citizen or as a Representative, to speak of its rulings

In a bondman's key,
With bated breath and a whispering humbleness, especially when the dictates of common sense satisfy me that they are consistent with neither reason nor law.

Yes, sir; I know full well that the Federal courts have so long and so frequently entertained jurisdiction of such cases, and that, too, in utter violation of what to my mind is one of the plainest limitations in the Constitution, that any further protest in that quarter against the exercise of such usurped authority would be met, as it has heretofore been met, with the iron maxim stare decisis; a rule which sanctifies absurdity by practice, and authorizes the repetition of error in defiance of law; and for that very reason I, for one, have sought in the provisions of this bill at least a partial correction of the evil.

The claim to that jurisdiction is predicated upon the clause in the second section of the third article in the Constitution, which extends the judicial power of the United States to controversies between citizens of different States, and was first judicially affirmed in the case of The United States Bank against Deveaux and Robinson, (reported in 5 Cranch, page 61,) a case in which a corporation composed of citizens of Pennsylvania had sued certain citizens of Georgia in the circuit court of the United States for the district of the latter State.

The circuit court seems to have taken a plain, common-sense view of the language of the Constitution. It supposed that when the framers of that instrument used the word citizen, they fully understood the signification of that term as it had been defined by all writers upon legal or political science who had preceded them and that they intended it to convey the idea of a living, sentient human being, begotten, conceived, and born according to the ordinary course of nature and having a natural and inalienable right to the protection of the sovereignty to which its allegiance was due, and not a mere emanation of the legislative brain, a mere legal entity with neither body nor soul, created for certain specific purposes enumerated in the charter of its existence, and therefore very properly, as I think, refused to entertain jurisdiction of the case. On a writ of error, however, the Supreme Court reversed the judgment of the court below, and inaugurated a series of adjudications involving as much ingenious judicial legerdemain by way of sustaining a usurped authority as can be found in any like number of decisions since the dawn of civil judicature among men—a series of decisions, sir, so inconsistent with each other, with other doctrines declared by the same court, and with long-settled principles in legal science that they must remain a puzzle to the student of jurisprudence until Gabriel shall blow his final trump.

Chief-Justice Marshall, who delivered the opinion of the court affirming the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in this case, distinctly held that it did not result from the fact that the bank had been chartered by an act of Congress, upon the principle that the case was one arising under the law of the United States, and admitted, moreover, that the mere legal entity known as a corporation aggregate was not and could not be a citizen; but in order to evade the logical result of that admission, which, in view of the plain common-sense meaning of the Constitution, would have been to put the case at once and forever beyond the cognizance of the Federal judiciary, he resorted to a most daring and unheard of piece of judicial necromancy, by which he temporarily dissolved the corporation, and remanded its aggregated elements back to their original individuality in order that they might in that capacity avail themselves of a privilege which they could not enjoy in their corporate relations. He not only ignored all the long-settled doctrines in relation to the nature, rights, and liabilities of bodies-corporate, but the very existence of the corporation itself. He shut his eyes to the character of the litigant actually before the court, and assumed to determine the rights of individuals who, as such, were total strangers to the record. He pushed the real plaintiff aside, and declared, substantially, that it was not really the Bank of the United States, not a corporation, who was suing, but the several, distinct, tangible, natural persons who composed it; that those persons were citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, and as such had a right to sue the citizens of another State in the Federal courts. Upon this anomalous ground, and this alone, he sustained the jurisdiction.

But in doing so, sir, he either forgot or intentionally ignored a number of important principles which had been settled for centuries. He seems to have totally forgotten the fact that for all the purposes contemplated in its charter a corporation is as complete a person in law as any of its corporators; that it is just as distinct in respect of its rights and liabilities from each of its members as its members are from each other; that it may contract with and sue, or be sued by, any or all of them; and that in making the singular declaration that a suit by a corporation was the suit of the individual corporators, he was simply asserting the legal absurdity that a man may sue or be sued by himself.

The truth is, sir, that one of the main inducements to the formation of corporations is that the individual corporators are responsible neither in person nor fortune for the acts or delinquencies of the artificial being of which they are the constituent members; yet if it be true, as asserted by the court in this case, that a suit by or against a corporation is nothing more nor less than a suit by or against a number of natural persons suing or defending under a common name, it should follow as a legal consequence that each of those persons should be individually answerable for its results.

But the court, in announcing this remarkable decision, seems to have forgotten also that the right to sue and the liability of being sued are but incidents to the capacity to make contracts, hold property, or to do other acts the performance or omission of which may become the subject-matter of controversies cognizable by courts of justice; and if the right of a corporation to sue in a Federal court is simply the right guaranteed by the Constitution to its members as citizens, then for the very same reason it may be said that a corporation may do anything contemplated in its charter merely in virtue and by right of the citizenship of its corporators, irrespective of the place of its incorporation or the locality of the transaction, and the ultimate logic from the premises would be, that, no matter for what purpose it may have been organized, or by what State it may have been chartered, it would have a perfect right to invade the limits of every other State in the Union, and carry on its business there, in competition with their citizens, in violation of their established policy, and in defiance of their statute laws; for it is distinctly provided in the second section of the fourth article of the Constitution that "the citizens of each State shall be entitled to all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several States."

This is a conclusion, sir, which no stretch of ingenuity can evade and no amount of sophistry conceal, if the doctrine laid down in this case of Deveaux be conceded as correct. Yet the Supreme Court, in a uniform series of decisions from the case of the Bank of Augusta against Earle in 1839 (reported in 13 Peters, page 519) down, has decided, over and over again, that corporations have no extra-territorial powers; that they cannot claim the rights of their stockholders as citizens of one State to make contracts or carry on business in any other State; but that the legal exercise of their faculties beyond the limits of the sovereignty creating them is the result of a mere comity among the States, dependent upon their own local policy and revocable by them at pleasure.

It is true, sir, that the court in a comparatively recent case made, in my judgment, a radical and dangerous departure from this doctrine, so consonant with reason, so irrefragable in principle, and so obviously essential to the autonomy of the several States. And I must say that it is a matter of profound amazement as well as regret that after having asserted this salutary doctrine so frequently and emphatically the court should so suddenly forget the rule stare decisis, and declare, as it did in the case of the Pensacola Telegraph Company, (reported in 6 Otto,) that it is not only competent for Congress, under the pretext of regulating commerce between the States, to authorize a corporation created by the laws of one State to invade the territory of another and carry on business within its limits in defiance of its own statutes, but that in so doing it may annul any exclusive grant of the same privilege to its own citizens, or similar corporations of its own creation.

But what is stranger still, sir, is the fact that the opinion in the case to which I have just alluded could have been penned by the same hand which wrote the following brief but vigorous passage in the dissenting opinion in the case of the Insurance Company against Morse, in 20 Wallace:

> A State has the right to exclude foreign insurance companies from the transaction of business within its jurisdiction. Such is the settled law of this court. The right to impose conditions upon their admission follows as a necessary consequence from the right to exclude them altogether.

I thank God, Mr. Speaker, that there was at least one member of the court who had sufficient perspicacity to anticipate the terrible results to which the hideous doctrine announced in the Pensacola Telegraph case must ultimately lead, and courage enough to enter a manly and patriotic protest against it. I would not wantonly disparage either the ability or the integrity of any of his learned associates, for they are all gentlemen for whom I entertain the highest personal respect; but I will say, sir, that had he not already inscribed his name among the very highest on the list of distinguished jurists who have illustrated the annals of American jurisprudence, his dissent from the opinion of the court in this case alone ought to secure for Mr. Justice Field an imperishable monument in the affectionate admiration of an intelligent and liberty-loving people.

But, sir, to return to the case of Deveaux. I have never conversed with an intelligent member of the bar who had carefully considered the doctrine there laid down who hesitated to pronounce it totally indefensible upon any correct principle of legal reason. Yet the fallacy in that case, glaring as it is, pales into utter insignificance when compared with the lengths to which the court has subsequently gone in asserting a jurisdiction which the Constitution under no rational interpretation ever conferred upon the Federal judiciary. I will not pause here to elaborate upon the manifest inconsistency between the positions assumed in that case and the reasoning as well as the doctrine laid down in Osborn against the Bank of the United States, 9 Wheaton, but will briefly call attention to the case of the Bank of the United States against the Planters' Bank of Georgia, decided during the same term and reported in the same volume.

In that case, sir, the court found itself confronted by difficulties which it did not seem to anticipate when the case of Deveaux was decided, difficulties which even its magic power of temporarily dissolving a corporation in order to hold on to a usurped jurisdiction was insufficient to solve. It found it necessary to exhibit a still more startling and extraordinary power, derived from some other source than the Constitution, and to strip one of the States of this Union of the habiliments of sovereignty and place it on a level with a private citizen. And it proceeded to exercise that power without the slightest hesitation or compunction, as I shall show.

It appeared, upon a plea to the jurisdiction in this case, that the Planters' Bank was a corporation, of which the State of Georgia and certain individuals who were citizens of the same State, with some of the stockholders in the United States Bank, were members; and we would naturally suppose that when the Chief-Justice came to resolve it back into its original elements, in order that Federal jurisdiction might attach to its ultimate atoms, as he did in the case of Deveaux, he would have exclaimed at once: "There can be no Federal jurisdiction here. It would be ridiculous to say that the State of Georgia can be a citizen, and especially a citizen of herself, and to allow this action to be prosecuted against her as a State would be in flat contravention of the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, which expressly provides that 'the judicial power of the United States shall not extend to any suit in law or equity commenced or prosecuted against one of the United States by citizens of another State or by citizens or subjects of any foreign state.'"

Mr. Justice Johnson in fact took precisely that ground in his dissenting opinion. Said he:

> The case of Deveaux forms, I suppose, one of the canons of this court. On no other ground can that decision be law than that the individual corporators were the real parties plaintiff. The same principle applied to the corporation defendant will make the individual corporators here the real defendants to this suit. If, then, the real plaintiff and the real defendants are so related in personal character as to preclude this court from taking jurisdiction, I see no ground on which we can sustain it, unless we reverse the decision in Deveaux's case. So also with regard to the State of Georgia. An original suit against that State could not be maintained. Yet if an original suit against a corporation be an original suit against each corporator, I cannot see wherein this case differs from that of a direct suit against the State.

The cruelty of this satire upon the opinion of the court is enhanced by the dissenting justice's cool disclaimer of any responsibility for its former decision, which had so unexpectedly proved a stumbling-block in its way. But it seems, sir, that his associates had determined that the United States Bank—that highly favored though illegitimate offspring of a rape upon the Constitution—should be permitted to sue any person in the Federal courts who was capable of being sued at all, without regard to citizenship, residency, or any other qualification whatever. They therefore proceeded to ignore the doctrine of the Deveaux case, and to dispose of the eleventh amendment and the sovereignty of Georgia in a few brief and summary sentences.

Chief-Justice Marshall, speaking for the court, said:

> The suit is against a corporation and the judgment is to be satisfied by the property of the corporation, not by that of the corporators. The State does not, by becoming a corporator, identify itself with the corporation. The Planters' Bank of Georgia is not the State of Georgia, although the State holds an interest in it.

Nothing could be more correct or more succinctly stated than this, sir, but how differently itsounds from the language of the court in the case of Deveaux penned by the same illustrious hand. There is no intimation here of a power in the court to work a temporary dissolution of the legal entity in order to operate directly upon its constituent elements, but a plain recognition of the familiar doctrine, that a corporation is a distinct being; that it has an individuality of its own; that it exercises its own rights, and must answer its own liabilities independently of the character of its members. But let us read a little farther:

> It is, we think, a sound principle that when a government becomes a partner in a trading company it divests itself, so far as concerns the transactions of that company, of its sovereign character and takes that of a private citizen. * * * The State of Georgia, by giving the bank the capacity to sue and be sued, voluntarily strips itself of its sovereign character so far as respects the transactions of the bank and waives all the privileges of that character.

The recklessness of such language as this, sir, considering the exalted reputation of the person who uttered it and the court which sanctioned it, is utterly appalling. I forbear to enlarge upon it. The loose confounding of corporations with mere partnerships, as well as the flippant assertion that the sovereignty of a State is something that can be laid aside at the whim of its Legislature, carries all the commentary it is entitled to upon its face. How much easier the solution of the point would have been, and how much more consistent with his fame as an illustrious jurist, had Chief-Justice Marshall adhered to the plain, simple principle, which had been familiar to the student of jurisprudence for centuries, that the capacity of a corporation to sue or be sued in no sense depends upon the personality of its corporators, but solely upon the law which gives it existence.

Mr. Justice Daniel, long afterward, animadverting upon the doctrine asserted in the case of Deveaux, remarked that it "presented a striking instance of the error into which the strongest minds may be led whenever they shall depart from the plain, common-sense acceptation of terms, or from well-ascertained truths, for the attainment of conclusions which the subtlest ingenuity is incompetent to sustain;"

and in view of the remarkable language used by the court, as well as the no less remarkable conclusion reached in the case of the Planters' Bank of Georgia, he might have as justly exclaimed, "How easy it is for even the most distinguished judge to lose sight of the beacon-lights of truth and the landmarks of law amid the murky mists of political prejudice!"

The doctrine in the case of Deveaux having been thus repudiated and disowned by its own author, it was hardly to be expected that the world would ever hear of it again; yet, singular as it may seem, in the very next case in which the question of jurisdiction was raised—I mean the case of the Commercial and Railroad Bank of Vicksburgh against Slocomb, 14 Peters' Reports, 63—we find it resurrected, reaffirmed, and relied on as a controlling authority, without the slightest reference whatever to the decision by which it had been virtually overruled. And thus the matter stood for four years until the case of the Louisville, Cincinnati and Charleston Railroad Company against Letson came to be considered, when the court found itself entangled in such a mesh-work of difficulties that it not only felt compelled to confess that the doctrine laid down in the cases of Deveaux and Slocomb was totally irreconcilable with that which had been acted upon in the case of the Planters' Bank of Georgia, but to assume a more preposterous position if possible than had been taken in either.

In this case Letson, a citizen of New York, had instituted an action in the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, against the railroad company, a corporation chartered by the Legislature of the latter State. A plea to the jurisdiction disclosed the fact that while some of the corporators were citizens of South Carolina, others of them were citizens of North Carolina, and, moreover, that the State of South Carolina, the Bank of Charleston, and the Charleston Insurance and Trust Company were also members of the corporation, and that each of these corporations was composed of members some of whom were citizens of the State of New York.

Now, upon this state of fact, sir, it was obvious that the jurisdiction of the Federal courts could not be maintained upon the doctrine laid down in the case of Deveaux, and reaffirmed in that of Slocomb, for several reasons. First, because upon the principle asserted in those cases some of the real parties defendant were citizens of the same State with the plaintiff, for which reason alone the court had refused to entertain jurisdiction in Slocomb's case; second, because several of the defendants, being citizens and residents of North Carolina, could not be sued in the district of South Carolina unless found therein; and, third, because upon the same principle the suit was in fact one directly against one of the United States by a citizen of another State and expressly prohibited by the eleventh amendment to the Constitution.

And it was equally manifest, sir, that jurisdiction could not be maintained upon the principle affirmed in the case of the Planters' Bank of Georgia, whether that principle was correct or not, because the defendant was not a corporation chartered by an act of Congress, and there could be no pretense that the case arose under the Constitution or laws of the United States or any treaty made under their authority. But the court was not to be persuaded to relax its grip upon the case by any such reasons as these, although it had furnished them out of its own mouth. It had already asserted its power to dissolve a corporation in order to get at its individual members in defiance of both reason and authority; but now it determined to exercise its potential magic in an opposite direction. Having exhibited its skill in destroying it concluded to try its genius in creating. It therefore assumed to clothe the corporation before it with faculties never dreamed of in its charter. It breathed upon the mere legal entity and it instantly became a living citizen. Ay, sir, a citizen! No longer a mere aggregation of citizens suing and being sued under an artificial name, but a real, live, independent citizen, though whether native born or naturalized or of what sex, color, or descent, the world must unfortunately remain forever in total ignorance.

It may have occurred to the court, sir, for aught I know, that if it was true, as had been held in the cases of Deveaux and Slocomb, that a suit against a corporation was simply a suit against the individuals composing it, then upon the plainest principles of common justice each of the corporators should be served with process and have a fair chance to be heard in his own defense. Or the court may have concluded upon reflection that it might be somewhat difficult in such a proceeding to eliminate the rights and interests of each individual member from those of the aggregate body, or to distinguish them from those of their fellow-corporators. But one thing is certain, it expressed the deepest regret that it had embarrassed itself with the doctrine announced in those cases, and determined to cut its way heroically through the toils in which it had thus thoughtlessly entangled itself. It accordingly declared through Mr. Justice Wayne, who delivered the opinion in this case—

> A corporation created by a State, to perform its functions under the authority of that State, and only suable there, though it may have members out of the State, seems to us to be a person—though an artificial one—inhabiting and belonging to that State, and therefore is entitled, for the purpose of suing and being sued, to be deemed a citizen of that State.

I say it in no spirit of wanton disrespect, Mr. Speaker; but it seems to me, sir, that when the court reached its "therefore" it was hopelessly lost in the fog. The logic of this language reduced to its simplest terms is this: "A corporation is constructively an inhabitant of the State by which it is created, and under whose authority it performs its functions; therefore it is a citizen of that State." The sophistry employed in the Deveaux case was, to say the least of it, ingenious and plausible; but this, sir, is mere drivel.

In the first place, mere inhabitancy or residence does not and cannot confer citizenship on any person. If it did, every unnaturalized foreigner residing in a State would be ipso facto a citizen, and our naturalization laws an idle and unnecessary piece of lumber on our statute-books. In the second place, the general capacity of a corporation to sue and be sued depends neither upon the personality of its members nor the particular locality which may be constructively termed its residence, but is derived, as I have said, solely from the law which gives it existence; and, in the third place, inhabitancy or residence is neither sufficient nor necessary to give jurisdiction to a Federal court in a civil cause. As the law now stands, an alien or a citizen of New York may sue a citizen of Kentucky in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Oregon, if the defendant can be found within the territorial jurisdiction of that court, although neither of them may be an inhabitant or resident of that district.

In a word, sir, where a mere personal qualification is essential to the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in any case the Constitution prescribes actual citizenship or actual alienage, and that qualification must exist independent of any volition or assumed power of creation in the court. The Federal judiciary has no more constitutional authority to create a citizen by mere construction in order to obtain or hold jurisdiction of a given case than it has to transform a citizen into an alien for the same purpose.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, the logic of the Supreme Court in relation to this subject seems to be completely wrong end foremost. It assumes the capacity of a corporation to sue and be sued in the Federal courts, and from that deduces the conclusion that it must of necessity be a citizen; whereas the capacity to sue and be sued in the Federal courts results from citizenship, and not citizenship from that capacity. I repeat, sir, that if the reasoning of the court means anything at all it is simply this: a corporation ought to have the capacity to sue and be sued in the courts of the United States, and therefore it has that capacity; none but citizens or aliens can have that capacity; a corporation has it, therefore a corporation is a citizen. But why not pronounce it an alien as well? As an alien it would answer every purpose of jurisdiction as conveniently as it could as a citizen, and more so, for as an alien it could sue a citizen of the same State by which it was chartered and under whose authority it performs its functions.

But let us see, sir, how this singular hypothesis of the Supreme Court squares with some of the most ordinary and universally recognized rights and duties of citizenship. If a corporation is a citizen of the State which created it, it is, by virtue of that character, a citizen of the United States also. If, therefore, it has been in existence twenty-five years, and an inhabitant of the State by which it was created, as the court says it is, it may be elected to Congress; or, if it has been chartered for thirty years, it may be chosen by the State Legislature as a United States Senator; or, without regard to the date of its incorporation, it may be appointed an elector of President and Vice-President; and if the court had only gone one step further and construed it to be "a natural-born citizen," it might in time aspire to either of those exalted offices, or be commissioned as General of the Army, or sent as minister plenipotentiary and embassador extraordinary to some foreign court. [Laughter.] Unfortunately, however, for the aspirations of these new-fangled citizens, Sir Edward Coke, more than a hundred years before our Government was dreamed of, suggested a little difficulty in their way which, under our Constitution, is perhaps insuperable. They cannot "take the oath," either "iron-clad" or "modified." [Great laughter.]

According to the same distinguished authority, however, they enjoy certain immunities which their less fortunate fellow-citizens cannot claim, and which may in some measure compensate for their incapacity to hold office. He says they cannot commit treason, felony, or other crime, nor suffer a traitor's or a felon's punishment. They are not liable to corporeal penalties and cannot be committed to prison, for their existence being ideal no man can arrest them, nor can they be tied up to the whipping-post, and having no souls to save they are totally unconcerned about the doctrines of Plymouth Church or the "mistakes of Moses." [Laughter.]

But, sir, there is nothing in all this that can be so construed as to excuse a corporation from the performance of military duty, and as they enjoy so many advantages over their fellow-citizens in other respects they should certainly be required to take their chances in the tented field and "on the terrible ridge of battle." In fact I am inclined to think, sir, that in many particulars an army of corporations would prove a decided success. Being incorporeal it would have no need of camp equipage, quartermaster's, commissary's, or medical stores, so the Government could not only save millions upon millions of dollars on that account, but dispense with the innumerable host of staff officers with which the service is now infested. [Laughter.] Being invisible, our soldiers could steal upon the enemy unawares and "smite him hip and thigh" without so much as being seen. [Renewed laughter.] Being intangible it would be impossible for any of them to be wounded, so we would have no medical and surgical histories to print at an enormous expense, and no floods of invalid pension bills crowding the Private Calendar. [Laughter.] Having no bowels they could not suffer from camp diarrhœa; and being immortal they could not be killed in battle, or if they could be it would make no difference to them as they have no souls to be damned in any event. [Great laughter.] How they would behave or what execution they might do in an actual fight I am unable to say, but there is one thing of which I have no doubt whatever, and that is, give them half a chance and they would be pretty certain to get away with the bulk of the enemy's supplies. [Laughter.]

It may be objected, however, sir, that I am not treating the opinion of the court fairly. It may be said that it only goes to the extent of declaring a corporation "a citizen for the purposes of suing and being sued." That is true, sir; but I respectfully submit that such a qualification of the citizenship with which it assumes to endow a mere ideal being is more obnoxious to criticism than if it had gone the full length of declaring a corporation a citizen for every purpose whatever. I submit, sir, such a thing as a quasi citizen is a nondescript utterly unknown to any system of political science ever taught among men. We have read the ancient myths of the satyr and the centaur, half man and half beast, but the enlightened intelligence of mankind has for centuries laughed at them as the crude figments of a benighted imagination. We have heard, too, of the Mississippi flatboatman who claimed to be half horse and half alligator, with a heavy cross of snapping-turtle, [great laughter,] yet nobody ever regarded it as anything more than the boast of a braggadocio inspired by bad whisky. But what are we to think of such a mongrel monster as this which seems to have exhaled from the judicial brain in the case of Letson?—half corporation and half citizen!

> Deformed, unfinished, sent before its time
> Into this breathing world, scarce half made up!

But, sir, if a citizen for one purpose why not for another? If a citizen for the purposes of suing and being sued, why not a citizen for the purposes of buying, selling, and holding property, or doing anything else contemplated in the charter? And if a citizen for all these purposes, why has it not a perfect right under the clause in the Constitution to which I referred awhile ago to perform its functions any where in any State, whether such State is willing to it or not?

Facilis desensus Averni.

The steps from one to another of these positions are easy and natural. If one of them is sound in principle, or consistent with common sense, the others are equally so. But whether sound or unsound, reasonable or unreasonable, a court whose assumed powers transcend those of Omnipotence itself, a court which can create a citizen out of nothing, can easily endow it with all the immunities guaranteed in the Constitution to those whom the Deity created out of the dust of the earth. It can readily put in practice its dictum in this case of Letson, "that to all intents and purposes for the objects of their incorporation these artificial persons are capable of being treated as a citizen as much as a natural person."

When this is done, sir, when the wealthy, powerful, and ambitious corporations of the more populous States are permitted as a matter of constitutional right to invade the limits of any other State for the purpose of carrying on their functions in defiance of its laws, as has already been done, though upon a different ground, in the case of the Western Union Telegraph Company against the Pensacola Telegraph Company, to which I alluded awhile ago, there is no telling where the mischief will end. As was truly said by one of the most distinguished judges that ever sat on the supreme bench of my own State:

> The apparent reciprocity of power would prove to be a delusion. The competition for extra-territorial advantages would but aggrandize the stronger to the disparagement of the weaker States. Resistance and retaliation would lead to conflict and confusion, and the weaker States must either submit to have their policy controlled, their business monopolized, their domestic institutions reduced to insignificance, or the peace and harmony of the States broken up and destroyed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. KNOTT. As I am somewhat fatigued, I would prefer to proceed to-morrow. [Cries of "All right!" "All right!"]

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky would prefer going on to-morrow instead of completing his remarks to-day. I therefore call for the regular order.

REVISION OF THE RULES.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. ATKINS. Before that motion is put I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky how much longer he supposes the Committee of the Whole will be engaged in the consideration of this report?

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is impossible for me to answer that question; but I will say I see no reason why this report should not be finally disposed of by to-morrow evening. And in order to hasten action on it, pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, I move that all further debate on clause 3, Rule XXI, which is now under consideration, be limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will that cover all amendments to be offered hereafter?

Mr. BLACKBURN. All amendments to this clause, clause 3 of Rule XXI.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the gentleman will limit the motion to the amendments now before the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I cannot agree to that. Unless we put some limit to the debate it will be simply interminable. We have had six weeks' debate on this report. I am sure the Committee on Rules have taken up no time unnecessarily, but it seems to me a six weeks' debate is enough. I propose there shall be twenty minutes more upon this one clause of this rule and all amendments pending thereto.

The motion to limit debate was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. CARLISLE in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The clause under consideration of the Committee of the Whole is clause 3 of Rule XXI, and the pending question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] as amended by the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.]

Mr. WHITE. Let the pending amendment be read.

The Clerk read Mr. SPEER's amendment, as follows:

> Strike out all after the word "order," in line 6 of clause 3, and insert "but it shall be in order to strike out any sum of money in an appropriation bill and insert a less sum."

And Mr. WARNER's substitute therefor, adopted by the Committee of the Whole, as follows:

> Except that it shall be in order to reduce the amounts of money provided for by existing law and covered by the bill, and to that extent only to change the law.

So that the clause, if amended by the adoption of Mr. WARNER's substitute, would read:

> 3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except that it shall be in order to reduce the amounts of money provided for by existing law and covered by the bill, and to that extent only to change the law.

Mr. FINLEY. As I understand, the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has been adopted by the Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been agreed to as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia; but the question still remains will the committee agree to this as a substitute for that part of the report.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to say that I hope the substitute will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to enter my protest——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. PAGE. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Any debate now will be under the operation of the order limiting debate.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on this paragraph and any amendments thereto is limited to twenty minutes.

Mr. PAGE. I desire to offer my protest against the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] which has been adopted as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER.] In my judgment the rule if adopted in that form will be worse than the twenty-first rule as it now stands. I believe that under the operation of this rule, should it be adopted, it would be in order to strike out the appropriation for the Army of the United States or to reduce it to a certain amount, and thereby the law might be changed to correspond with such reduction.

Now, it has been decided by the gentleman who at present occupies the chair that unless a proposition showed upon its face that it did reduce expenditures it was not in order upon an appropriation bill.

It was decided by a former Speaker of this House, Hon. Mr. Kerr, of Indiana, that unless a provision reported in an appropriation bill, or presented as an amendment thereto, should show upon its face a reduction of expenditures, it was not in order upon an appropriation bill. The pending proposition, upon which the committee is now called to vote, if adopted, would make it absolute that an amendment reducing the amount of money provided for by law would be in order, and the law could be so amended as to correspond with that reduced amount of money appropriated. That would render certain what has been ruled by but one presiding officer, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] who now has charge of the report of the Committee on Rules. He is the only chairman of the Committee of the Whole of this House, so far as I know, who has decided contrary to three prior decisions by occupants of the chair.

The first of those decisions was made by the Speaker of this House on an amendment to a bill proposing to transfer the control of the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department. That matter was thoroughly discussed in this House, and upon a point of order Hon. M. C. Kerr ruled the proposition out of order. In the Forty-fourth Congress the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] while acting as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, ruled out a similar proposition on the appropriation bill; and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. Eden, ruled on a proposition submitted by my colleague at that time, Mr. Wigginton, to abolish the offices of surveyors-general in the States and Territories, that the amendment was not in order, as it did not show upon its face that it would work a retrenchment of expenditures. And the present occupant of the Chair, the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CARLISLE,] in the Forty-fourth Congress made a similar ruling.

But in the last Congress the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] reversed these rulings and did admit a proposition that provided for the abolition of the offices of surveyors-general in the different States and Territories, and which would have worked a thorough change in existing laws in reference to the public lands. That proposition was offered as an amendment to an appropriation bill, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] ruled it in order.

With that exception it has been universally held under the present rule that no amendment of that kind was in order. Under the proposed change, now pending before the Committee of the Whole, the amendment, if adopted, will make absolute the rule that an amount of money provided by existing law may be changed to a less sum, and to that extent the law may be changed so as to conform to the reduced sum of money appropriated.

I am opposed to that, and I hope the Committee of the Whole will vote down the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER,] as amended by the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER.] I infinitely prefer the present rule, with a fair construction of the rule, such as we have had on different occasions., I believe the minority of this House will be safer with the rules as they now stand than they would be with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] and therefore I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not think the record will bear out the statement made by the gentleman from California, [Mr. PAGE,] who seems, instead of rising to discuss the amendment or the clause pending, to be actuated rather by a desire to indulge in a piece of criticism upon some ruling that I may chance to have made while occupying the chair. I do not believe the record will bear out the construction the gentleman gives to that ruling; I do not believe any such singularity of ruling will appear.

I certainly do not mean to reflect upon any ruling which may have been made by the Speaker of this House, by the present occupant of the chair, or by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SPRINGER,] as they have been referred to. I simply desire to say that if at any time in the past I have made a ruling, or shall at any time in the future be fortunate enough to make one, which incurs the criticism of the parliamentarian from California, it will only strengthen my conviction of having been right in that ruling.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. SPEER, as amended by the adoption of the substitute offered by Mr. WARNER; and upon a division there were—ayes 32, noes 80.

No further count being called for, the amendment, as amended, was not agreed to.

Mr. PRICE. Is an amendment now in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the amendment and then decide.

Mr. PRICE. I move to add to clause 3 of Rule II that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Which retrenchment shall not be by inference, but shall in express terms specify on its face the amount of money to be saved by the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment would be in order as a substitute for the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. LOWE,] which is now pending. The Clerk will read the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. LOWE, which was to add to clause 3 the following:

Provided, however, That no provision or amendment of a partisan character shall be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] would be in order as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. LOWE.]

Mr. PRICE. I will move it as a substitute for that amendment, and ask that the Clerk read the third clause as it will be if the amendment which I have offered shall be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress. Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures, which retrenchment shall not be by inference, but shall in express terms specify on its face the amount of money to be saved by the amendment.

Mr. PRICE. The only object I have in offering that amendment is this: in the discussions upon this very point, whether the amendment was germane and whether it did retrench expenditures, the occupants of the chair at different times have decided differently. On the one side it would be alleged that such an amendment would decrease expenditures; and on the other side it would be affirmed that the amendment would not reduce expenditures.

My object in offering this amendment is simply to fix the matter definitely so far as this point is concerned, so that in every case and under all circumstances an amendment, to come within the rule, shall specify on its face, not by inference but in express terms, that expenditures are reduced and shall state the amount of the reduction.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to say but a single word. It was generally understood that the Committee on Rules were to meet for the consideration of this question, and that very likely they might agree upon something to take the place of these very amendments which have been proposed. I simply wish to say that the committee met last night, and adjourned at eleven o'clock without agreeing upon anything to take the place of Rule XXI; and they cannot agree.

Now, as only twenty minutes are allowed for debate, I desire to say that hereafter when there will be no opportunity for discussion, an amendment may be offered providing in effect that nothing shall be in order as an amendment on an appropriation bill unless it shall have been reported by a committee of this House. Now, I warn gentlemen of the House that this would be infinitely worse than the rule as it stands at present, because under that rule without any amendment we have only fifteen men who can set their busy brains at work to invent some sort of a political "rider" to put on an appropriation bill. But if such an amendment as I have indicated be adopted, authorizing every committee of this House to report amendments and providing that these amendments shall be in order, you simply declare that not fifteen merely, but every committeeman on the democratic side of this House, so long as the democratic party are in the majority here, may set his busy brain at work getting up some sort of "riders" for appropriation bills. If such a proposition is made, I trust it will be promptly voted down.

Mr. SPEER. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No amendment would be in order at present, as two amendments are pending.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say a single word on the pending amendment in reply to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.] The object of that gentleman is manifestly good; but the language of his amendment makes it of no consequence whatever as an effective machine for preventing "riders." Under such a provision I can offer an amendment to the Army appropriation bill reorganizing the Army of the United States throughout, and can say in words as a part of my amendment that the clause thus added shall reduce the cost of supporting the Army $1,000. I can say in the amendment, "for the purpose of reducing the cost of supporting the Army $1,000, which is hereby done, the following shall be a part of the law." Thus my amendment reorganizing the whole Army or any other department of the service complies technically with the terms of the rule.

Now, in my judgment, we are in an attitude where one of three results must happen: either the rule must stand as now, with all its bad consequences; or the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER,] which mitigates largely the evil of the existing rule, will be adopted; or some middle proposition, like that of my colleague, [Mr. WARNER,] will be adopted, which, contrary to the opinion of my friend from California, [Mr. PAGE,] does, as I think, largely cut down the power of "riders," although not as much as many of us desire. I hope that under the present circumstances we shall get one good, fair chance to vote off altogether that clause of the rule which allows any change of existing law on an appropriation bill. That is the fair, plain, clear reparation of all difficulty. If we cannot do that, then the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia is the next best thing, and I hope we shall stick by it.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is the same thing.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SPEER. What is the condition of the amendment I submitted?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been disposed of by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPEER. So I understood, and therefore I desired to offer another amendment.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take any part in this discussion until the amendment was proposed by my colleague [Mr. WARNER] to the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. SPEER.] The propositions, both of my colleague and the gentleman from Georgia, are full of danger. To ascertain the danger we must understand the legal situation upon which these propositions operate. This House is not now engaged in legislation, but in determining the rules which shall govern the proceedings incident to legislation. In doing this the House can undoubtedly regulate the methods to be pursued in the exercise of the other powers conferred upon it in the Constitution, but it cannot impair or destroy those powers.

The House originates appropriation bills or bills of revenue. The propositions of my colleague and of the gentleman from Georgia operate upon them. They declare, in substance, that no general nor political legislation shall be attached to appropriation bills.

This would do if both Houses could originate bills of revenue; but the Constitution expressly declares that this power shall be exercised by the House of Representatives only. What does this mean? History incontestably demonstrates that this provision was inserted in the Constitution to give to the immediate representatives of the people the control of appropriations, to enable them to restrain executive authority, to secure redress of grievances, and to bring about the adoption of salutary measures of legislation. It was designed to authorize the House to say to the President that unless there was redress of the grievances of which it complained in a particular Department of the executive branch of the Government there should be no appropriation for such Department.

Such has been the use of a similar provision in the English constitution. For such uses has it been employed, I venture to say, by every House of Representatives of the Congress since the adoption of the Federal Constitution. Without such power resulting to the House, the language of the Constitution in this respect is meaningless. But such uses are impossible if general legislation be prohibited upon appropriation bills. The executive authority might approve the appropriation bill and veto the general legislation which contained the redress of grievances if they were presented to him separately. This, indeed, would always be the case when there was a dispute between the executive and legislative branches of government.

To adopt, therefore, the amendments of my colleague and the gentleman from Georgia is to surrender the power the Constitution gives, to abdicate the authority the House possesses to originate bills of revenue exclusively, and this, too, with the unlimited power of amendment of the House bills in the Senate. The propositions, therefore, not only destroy the power of the House to secure redress of grievances through appropriations, but practically make it an exclusive power of the Senate. All this I admit may be done by a constitutional amendment only, as has been already done by the many States to which the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] referred the other day. I deny that this result can be accomplished by the adoption of a mere rule, intended only for the regulation of the proceedings of the House.

But even if the power to redress grievances through appropriation bills might be taken away by a rule, it seems to me it would be unmanly in any House, under any circumstances, at any time, to so surrender it. It would be a confession that the majority was afraid to legislate, an admission of its own inability to meet questions as they arise, and a proclamation of its own inefficiency. It would be a voluntary binding of its own hands. It would be shrinking from the responsibilities of legislation which each member assumes when he accepts the certificate of his election and the majority assumes when it organizes the House.

But how utterly inexcusable it would be for the House of Representatives in this Congress in the present exigency to surrender this power! In the extra session we entered into a contest which we knew would be protracted. The power we assailed was entrenched behind past legislation and present executive authority. We knew that we could not win in a day. Thus far in the contest we have learned the value of our power to control the purse. Through it, and through it only, we have won impartial juries and shorn the Army of much of its dangerous power. And now in the midst of the conflict it is proposed to abandon the power which has given us the partial victory. Astounding proposition! Surrender of the colors in the face of the foe, abandonment of the vantage-ground in the heat of the fight, these are offenses rarely excused in military warfare. They are absolutely without justification here when we are engaged in a contest for the liberties of the people, when their voices are temporarily silent except as we utter them, and when we have their colors in our hands at our own solicitation.

For one, I insist that the democratic majority of this House shall stand impregnably upon the Constitution; that it shall exercise every power that instrument has conferred for the people; and that least of all and last of all shall it abate one jot or tittle of its authority over the purse until every vestige of military power shall have disappeared from the peaceful States of this Union. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] that of the twenty minutes allowed by the House for debate on this proposition only two minutes remain.

Mr. WARNER. I regret that I have not more time; I hope my time may be extended.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I repudiate as undemocratic the doctrine that this House may rightly withhold appropriations from legitimate objects, necessary to the support of the Government, as a means of coercing the Senate or the executive branch of the Government.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman how he voted at the extra session on riders on appropriations. Did he not vote in favor of putting them on?

Mr. WARNER. I would vote again to reduce or, if need be, to shut off entirely an appropriation from a specific object for which I thought the appropriation ought to be reduced or stopped altogether, and to that end to change the law. That is a right this House clearly has, and I am the last member that would surrender that right. But to stop appropriations from objects about which there is no contention, as a means to compel compliance with some measure about which the majority of this House and the Senate or the Executive may differ, is quite a different proposition. Individual members may have so held and voted at the extra session, but the democratic party held to no such doctrine. It refused to take that position, and for one I will not be committed to it now.

The doctrine that we are to look to the Executive for a redress of grievances is utterly foreign to our system of Government. It was the old doctrine five hundred years ago or a hundred years ago that all powers of government were inborn in the king; and consequently when our forefathers got King John in a tight place they compelled him to give up some of his rights and vest them in the people, or rather, in certain great barons. In England it is true the people have said to the king time and again, "We will not let you have money; we will not levy taxes or give you revenues unless you will surrender to us some of the powers of government inherited by divine right, at least unless you will yield to us some privileges or secure to us some liberties." And this is consistent with the theory of the divine right of kings. But how utterly different our theory of government? With us government derives all its powers from the consent of the governed.

The President of the United States never possessed power not derived from the people, and I do not propose, myself, to recognize any other doctrine. All power in this country originates with the people. The Executive has no power, any more than this House has, except that which the people have given to him, and it is absurd to talk about compelling a redress of our grievances from that official. The people redress their own grievances in this country; and the President is as much responsible to the people as is the House of Representatives or Congress.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEER. I desire to offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. LOWE] as sought to be amended by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE:]

But it shall be in order to strike out an amount of money appropriated in a bill and insert a less amount.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that this proposition is substantially the same thing that we have already voted on.

Mr. SPEER. It differs from the amendment heretofore offered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that it is substantially the same.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not identical.

Mr. BLOUNT. It is substantially so.

Mr. SPEER. The phraseology is different.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the idea is the same.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the present recollection of the Chair, this is the identical amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio and rejected in the committee when this question was last up.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair is mistaken. I said "sum of money." This is "amount of money," and markedly different.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. It is a difference without a distinction.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Ohio state that in his opinion this means anything different from the one he offered?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is for the House to judge. One is different; it is not identical, and that is what the rule turns on.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit it to the Chair, and I do not think the Chair will have any difficulty in deciding it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair dislikes to pass upon the mere definition or significations of words when the committee is equally competent to do so. But it seems to the Chair this is identical——

Mr. GARFIELD. The rule is very clear that an identical proposition that has been voted down cannot be offered; but nothing is more common here in practice in the House than to strike out an unimportant word or make an unimportant change, and then it is in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Where does the gentleman find the word "identical" inserted in the rule?

Mr. GARFIELD. What is that?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the gentleman from Ohio where he finds in any rule it must be identically the same proposition?

Mr. GARFIELD. I say the rule is so.

Mr. BLACKBURN. And I say there is no such word in the rule.

Mr. GARFIELD. A proposition consists of words, and if the words are the same it is the same proposition.

Mr. BLACKBURN. There is no such thing in the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. And if it is not the same proposition it is in order.

Mr. REED. A proposition may be sometimes decided by the conclusion to which it would arrive if carried out. Now, if the proposition on the other side is carried out to its conclusion——

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I object to this debate if it is not in order, and it is not in order, in my judgment, as we have already closed debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear gentlemen on this question of order.

Mr. REED. If the proposition on the other side is carried out to its legitimate conclusion it would make the Chairman the interpreter of the meaning of amendments, and that assuredly cannot be the object of any rule of this House. If the language is different, it is for the House to determine whether the meaning is the same or not, not for the Chairman. I submit there is no other rule consistent with proper deliberation on the part of an assembly like this.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the Chair ruled on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has intimated what his impression is, but has not made a final decision. The gentleman from Georgia, who offered the amendment, desires to be heard on it, and the Chair will hear him.

Mr. SPEER. It seems to me there is a difference in the amendment I offer from the one disposed of by the committee. The one which was disposed of is this: "But shall be in order to strike out any sum of money in an appropriation bill and insert a less sum." That was "sum of money in an appropriation bill." This is, "But it shall be in order to strike out an amount of money appropriated in a bill."

The CHAIRMAN. What is the difference between "a sum of money" and an "amount of money?"

Mr. SPEER. Of course, it is the same thing, but it is not the same proposition.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Precisely the same.

Mr. SPEER. I submit it is for the House to say whether it is the same proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course it is for the House or the committee, as the case may be, in every instance to revise the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the Chair let me make a suggestion as to a very decided matter of substance of difference in these two propositions?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to hear the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) If the gentleman is to debate the proposition, I should like to have a minute.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am not going to debate the merits at all. One of these propositions relates to an appropriation bill as such, namely, any one of the twelve regular bills, and the other relates to any appropriation in any bill. One of them, therefore, applies to all bills, whatever their character, containing an appropriation, and the other is confined to the twelve appropriation bills. If the Chair will observe, they are substantially different propositions as well——

Mr. ATKINS. There are more than twelve appropriation bills. Sometimes we have half a dozen deficiency bills, and those are appropriation bills also.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What effect had the order of the House limiting all debate upon the third clause of this twenty-first rule and all amendments thereto to twenty minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. That relates to debate on the merits; but the Chair will hear discussion on the point of order. The Chair has listened to this discussion, as he is reluctant to take upon himself the authority of depriving the committee of the right to pass upon amendments; but the Chair is wholly unable to perceive any difference whatever between the words "amount of money" and "sum of money" in this connection. And as to the last point made by the gentleman from Ohio, this rule which is under consideration relates to general appropriation bills and to none other; and if this amendment were ingrafted, it would still refer only to general appropriation bills. The Chair decides that the point of order is well taken, and hopes that any gentleman who excepts to the ruling will take an appeal from the decision of the Chair to the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. With the utmost respect to the presiding officer I appeal from that decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the question before the committee is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee? The Chair would prefer to have a division of the House on this question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GARFIELD and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 100.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. SPEER. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

But it shall be in order to strike out an amount of money appropriated in any bill for any purpose, passed or pending, and insert a less amount.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I make the same point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. And besides it is not germane.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not germane. It is substantially the same proposition.

Mr. BLOUNT. That does not relate to appropriation bills.

Mr. SPEER. It does not allude to appropriation bills. It alludes to any bill before the House making appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SPEER. This does not refer to appropriation bills only.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Then it is not germane.

Mr. SPEER. But it refers to any bill before the House appropriating money. I offer that substitute now, and I think it is in order. It is substantially different from the amendment disposed of by the committee.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will not go on extending the time of discussion at all. I will put the gentleman from Georgia on his candor, and ask him whether it is not substantially the same amendment disposed of by this Committee of the Whole once, and ruled out of order by the chairman a second time, and the action of the Chair in that matter sustained by the committee?

In the first place, the point of order is made against the amendment of the gentleman because it is not germane to the subject that is embraced in this clause of the rule. In the second place, the point of order is made it is not in order because it is (and no one will undertake to deny it) substantially and identically the amendment which has been once already disposed of by this committee, and a second time offered and ruled out by the Chair, and that ruling sustained by a very decided majority of the committee.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I think it is a very fair index of the confusion of mind prevailing on this subject that the gentleman from Kentucky should speak of a "substantially identical amendment." I congratulate the House on having decided that striking out a word and inserting another is not an amendment, but I certainly hope they will not go to the extent of saying that striking out a half a dozen words and inserting others is not an amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not see anything in that to reply to. [Laughter.]

Mr. HASKELL. The gentleman from Kentucky says it is substantially the same amendment as the other, but there is no such language in the rule which compels the chairman to rule out another amendment which is substantially the same.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not wish to compel the chairman to do anything.

Mr. HASKELL. But I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky to this fact, that it has been the practice from time immemorial when a sum of money, say, for instance, $10,000, is named in a bill, for a gentleman to rise and move to amend it by making it $9,999.99½. There never was a legislative body on earth or a parliamentary law promulgated by any man which would not compel the recognition of that proposition as an amendment which would be in order, and yet it is substantially the same thing.

Now, here is an amendment differing in the construction of it even Here is an amendment using entirely different words, and by what rule of parliamentary law is the Speaker of this House or the chairman of this committee to make himself a dictionary for the House? Does the rule say that it shall be substantially the same in order to rule it out? It says practically it shall not be the original one. Here is an amendment with five new words in it. Who is to judge of the interpretation of those words? Who is to be the dictionary for the House of Representatives? Is it the Speaker or the chairman of the Committee of the Whole that is to determine the difference in the legal effect of the words employed in an amendment?

I ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the statement I have made is not true, that where the sum of $100 occurs in a bill, and $99.99 is moved as an amendment, such an amendment is constantly entertained? The gentleman has only to let his mind run back over his long legislative experience to call up dozens of instances where these slight and immaterial amendments have been ruled to be in order.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not see half a cent's difference between these two. [Laughter.]

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say but a word. I call the attention of the Chair to the proposition made by the gentleman from Kentucky. That gentleman says this is almost the identical amendment offered before. He says it ought not to be allowed; first, because it is not germane to the subject-matter; and, second, because it is identically the same amendment. Now, nobody claims that the other amendment was not germane. The gentleman objected to it, but did not use the word "germane" at all in reference to it. The Chair recognized the other amendment as germane. The gentleman from Kentucky knows the other amendment was germane. And yet he has discovered such a difference between that amendment and this, which he says are identical, that this amendment is not germane.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not intend to enter into any dispute with my colleagues on the Committee on Rules. The gentleman from Maine knows very well that he is straying away from the fold in what he is doing now. But I wish to ask, does he not know the other amendment did not apply to all bills but simply to appropriation bills?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; and therefore it is not the same amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Does the gentleman not know that this amendment in being made to apply to all bills is not germane to the clause on which it is sought to ingraft it? I put the gentleman on his candor, and ask him if he was in the chair would he not rule this amendment out of order as not being germane to the pending clause?

Mr. FRYE. What I would do if in the chair I do not know.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do.

Mr. FRYE. But I do know this, that if I was chairman of the committee from whose fold I am wandering, I would not insist, first, that the amendment is not in order, because it is the identical amendment offered before; and, second, that it is not germane because it is not the identical amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not propose to argue the matter any further. I simply mean, in one sentence, to restate the objection I made in submitting the point of order. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] is amenable to the criticism passed upon it in that it is not germane to this clause of the rule; and, in the second place, it is amenable to the criticism passed upon it for the reason that any part of it that is germane, or that could possibly be admitted as germane as an amendment to this clause of this rule, has already been passed upon not once but twice by the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to say a single word, in the first place, on the question of germaneness raised by my friend from Kentucky. What is this rule we are acting upon to which he says the amendment is not germane? It is Rule XXI, entitled "On bills"—bills before the House of Representatives for action. The first and second clauses of this rule treat of certain features of bills. The third section is as to appropriation bills. The term "general appropriation bill" is used. But with a House of Representatives so addicted to retrenchment as this, if they object to applying the restrictions of this rule to any bills that have appropriations in them just because they are not general appropriation bills, they are making an exceedingly fine sight, in order to rule out this amendment on the point of germaneness.

In the next place, as to the identity of these propositions, the distinguished chairman of the committee seems to have ruled, and the gentlemen on the other side seem to have supported his ruling, that this House has no business to be consulted on a matter of style. I had supposed that, even if I approved the substance of a proposition, I had a right to rise and amend it in regard to its style or to suggest something about the grammar, something about rhetoric, something about words of many syllables or words of few syllables; and my friend from Georgia has now introduced a proposition that has at least five words different from the words of the other amendment. It may be with him a matter of style. I shall be sorry if Georgia cannot be permitted to have a voice on the floor of this House on a matter of style. This is one of the State rights I will defend. I have sometimes myself moved to strike out the last word, and I have known half a dozen other gentlemen move to strike out the same last word, and we have known that proposition to be voted on; but all at once an appeal is made to party discipline to prevent us from even correcting the style of an amendment. I think my distinguished friend in the chair will, on reflection, not rule that a change so important as that of five whole words is one which the gentleman from Georgia has not a right in his place as a member of the House to offer in the form of an amendment; and if we are acting on appropriations, then let us act on all appropriations, whether they be in any one of the twelve appropriation bills or any one of the two thousand other bills that appropriate money.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly. I am always ready to allow the gentleman almost anything he wants.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In order to make the gentleman's defense of the amendment now pending absolute and complete, will he allow me to read what he himself, as a member of the Committee on Rules, has very recently said in a unanimous report made accompanying this proposed revision of the rules?

Mr. GARFIELD. I think I remember it.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will read it, with the gentleman's permission.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think it will be very good reading.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Here it is:

Under the present rule "a bill or resolution pending before the House" may be moved as an amendment to a pending proposition, if germane, by simply changing a word or two in no sense important or material, thereby accomplishing indirectly what the rules prohibit doing directly, a species of parliamentary legerdemain that certainly ought not to be countenanced or permitted by a rule.

[Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. GARFIELD. That is very good; but in the pending amendment there is a change of five words, which is more than "parliamentary legerdemain."

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] allow me a moment?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly I will.

Mr. ROBESON. Are we not now acting under the rule which you say in your report permits that very thing?

Mr. BLACKBURN. We are.

Mr. ROBESON. Then is not this the same as that which the gentleman admits is in order under the present rule?

Mr. BLACKBURN. By no means, for it is not a word or two; but, according to the statement of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] offering the amendment, it is either five or six words.

Mr. ROBESON. Will the gentleman permit me a minute?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Certainly.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire only to ask the gentleman whether that is not the fault which the Committee on Rules finds with the present rules, and whether it is not conclusive that we have the right to make such an amendment as the rules now stand under which we are acting?

Mr. BLACKBURN. That would be the risk under the present rules, but not to the extent that this amendment goes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks there is not very much difficulty about this question. The third clause of Rule XXI, as reported by the Committee on Rules, relates as it now stands to general appropriation bills alone. The amendments which have been offered heretofore, the one voted upon by the committee as well as the one which the Chair ruled out of order, did not propose to change the rule in that respect. But the amendment now sent up proposes to extend this provision to all bills which may appropriate money, and therefore in the opinion of the Chair it is quite different from the one heretofore offered and voted down, as well as the one offered and ruled out by the Chair.

Nor does the Chair think that he can rule this amendment out of order upon the ground that it is not germane to the particular clause under consideration. It is for the Committee of the Whole to say in what part of the reported revision of the rules it will insert any particular provision. The Chair can only rule a proposition out of order when in his opinion it is not germane to any part of the report of the Committee on Rules, or to any part of the subject-matter before the Committee of the Whole. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order and admits the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) Is any debate allowable on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The twenty minutes' time allowed by the House for debate on this clause and amendments thereto has expired.

Mr. RANDALL, (the Speaker.) I would like to have said a word. I wanted to say if I may be allowed to do so—— [Cries of "No!" "No!" on the republican side, and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

But it shall be in order to strike out an amount of money appropriated in any bill, for any purpose past or pending, and insert a less sum.

Mr. WARNER. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Not having given particular attention—— [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WARNER. I want to make a parliamentary inquiry, and I propose to make it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. [Renewed cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. WARNER. I do not propose to debate; I desire to inquire if an amendment to the amendment is in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Not at this time. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. SPEER] is a substitute for the one proposed by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. REED. Does that propose to strike out all of the third clause after the word "order?"

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is to strike out all after the word "order," where it occurs in the last sentence of the third clause of Rule XXI, and insert what has been read by the Clerk. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have tellers; we might as well have them first as last.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection tellers will be ordered.

There was no objection, and Mr. SPEER and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported that there were—yeas 120, noes 121.

So the amendment of Mr. SPEER was not agreed to.

[Applause on the democratic side.]

Mr. ROBESON. I send to the desk an amendment which I desire to offer as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the word "order," in the next to the last line of the third clause of the twenty-first rule; so that the last sentence of the clause will read:

"Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto, changing existing law, be in order."

The CHAIRMAN. This is an amendment to the text, not to the substitute now pending. It can be considered after the pending questions are disposed of.

Mr. ROBESON. I desire to offer it whenever it may be in order.

Mr. WHITE. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE:]

Strike out all after the word "order" and insert:

The general appropriation bills shall embrace nothing but appropriations for the ordinary expenses of the different departments of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN was about to put the question on the amendment of Mr. WHITE, when

Mr. WHITE called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WHITE and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 112, noes 117.

So the amendment of Mr. WHITE was not agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. I offer the following as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE:]

Strike out all after the word "order" and insert the following:

And that it shall not be in order to insert in any appropriation bill any provision changing existing law, except in reducing the amount of money to be appropriated.

Mr. BLOUNT. I submit that substantially this amendment has been voted on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this is a different proposition in some respects from any amendment yet voted on.

Mr. STEPHENS. I call for tellers on agreeing to the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BAKER and Mr. BLACKBURN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 111, noes 120.

So the amendment of Mr. BAKER was not agreed to.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask what amendments are now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. The two pending amendments are that of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. LOWE] and the substitute therefor offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. We evidently cannot to-day get through the amendments which gentlemen desire to offer to this clause; so the committee may as well rise.

The motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, was agreed to, there being—ayes 135, noes 20.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CARLISLE reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the revision of the rules, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested, joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia; and

An act (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. YOCUM, for four days, on account of sickness in his family.

INTERNATIONAL POLAR CONGRESS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives of the United States:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives of the 5th instant, calling for any information which I may have received of the proceedings of the International Polar Congress convened in Hamburg, Germany, October 1, 1879, I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State on the subject.

R. B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, February 16, 1880.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table, for present action, the bill (S. No. 631) donating six condemned cannon and cannon-balls to Post No. 66, Grand Army of the Republic, of Muncy, Pennsylvania, for monumental purposes.

Mr. MARTIN, of Delaware. I call for the regular order.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows, viz:

Also, the petition of Henry Brown and 155 others, soldiers and sailors of the late war, of Snyder County, Pennsylvania, for the passage of a law allowing them the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks for their services—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message of the President of the United States, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 19th of January, a report from the Secretary of State upon the American-Spanish claims commission; which was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of the 22nd of January, in relation to furnishing Indian supplies, a communication from the acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, together with copies of all replies received from members of the board of Indian commissioners; which, on motion of Mr. TELLER, was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

GENEVA AWARD—FITZ-JOHN PORTER.

Mr. THURMAN. I desire to give notice that on Monday next, at the end of the morning hour, I shall move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 1194) for reviving and continuing the court of commissioners of Alabama claims, and for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I desire to say to my friend from Ohio that I have already given way in several instances for the consideration of other bills, having given notice myself that I would ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1139) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter, late major-general of the United States volunteers and colonel of the Army. The understanding was had between the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MCDONALD] having in charge the pending special order and myself—and I think it was the understanding of the Senate—that immediately following the disposition of the pending bill—the 5 per cent. bill—the case of General Porter should come up. That has been the expression had in various ways when the Porter bill has come before the Senate; and I desire now to give notice that immediately after the present bill is disposed of I shall attempt at least to press the case of General Porter.

Mr. THURMAN. At the request of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR,] who is compelled to be absent next Monday, and who wishes to address the Senate on the Geneva award bill when it is next taken up, I will change my notice, and give notice that I shall move on Tuesday next, at the morning hour, to take up that bill.

Mr. RANDOLPH. Before we proceed to the Calendar, can it not be understood that the Geneva award bill shall follow the Porter bill, which I have particularly in charge? Would that arrangement be satisfactory to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. THURMAN. I cannot make that agreement. The Geneva award bill has been put in my charge. It involves large interests, very large interests indeed. The Committee on the Judiciary, without any just reason, however, have been complained of that they did not push this matter as fast as it ought to be pushed; and we are overwhelmed with letters now from people who think they are entitled to some of this money, all sorts and conditions of people, urging us to proceed with the bill. Let the decision of the Senate be had upon this subject, whether in favor of this bill or some other measure; let there be a decision. It is, I must say, in my judgment something very nearly approaching a disgrace to this Government that this money has not been distributed long before this day. Under these circumstances, with this pressure upon me, it is a duty I owe to the committee whose organ I am, and also to the public, to insist that the bill shall be taken up at that time. If the Senate should not think so, if it should prefer to proceed with something else, of course such will be the vote of the Senate.

Mr. RANDOLPH. There is a special order which is to follow the bill that is now under consideration as the unfinished business of the Senate. The Senator from Ohio does not recognize that fact. I have given notice from day to day and from time to time, that immediately upon the completion of the unfinished business, I shall ask for the consideration of the case of General Porter. I admit the importance of the Geneva award bill, but I can say to the Senator from Ohio that notwithstanding the magnitude of the interests involved in the Geneva award, in my estimation, the case that I am urging the Senate to consider involves something more than money. It involves, in my judgment, the honor of the Government.

Mr. HOAR. I understand the notice of the Senator from Ohio relates to Tuesday. Has not the Senator from New Jersey all of this week and next Monday for the consideration of the Fitz-John Porter case?

Mr. RANDOLPH. If the unfinished business can be disposed of, I should be very glad to have the Fitz-John Porter case considered within that time. Day after day, for the last ten days the promise has been given that General Porter's case should come up, but for one reason or another, and I need not detain the Senate by stating what those reasons are, the case has not been reached, and now I am threatened, so to speak—not to use a discourteous expression—by my friend from Ohio with an order by which the Porter bill will be still longer delayed.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire, representing a very small portion of the Committee on Military Affairs on this question, to say that so far as the Geneva award bill is concerned of course it is important; but I may say the same in reference to every question before the Senate. I cannot see the distinction Senators make between certain classes of cases. The Senate has agreed twice by unanimous consent to take up the bill mentioned by the chairman of the Military Committee so soon as the question should be decided which is now the unfinished business of the Senate; and I say to the Senator from Ohio that when the case of General Porter is decided I for one will support him in attempting to bring the Geneva award bill before the Senate, and having that matter also decided at an early day.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THURMAN presented the memorial of J. N. McCullough, vice-president of the Pennsylvania Company, and of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company, representing thirty-seven hundred and thirty-six miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 per ton, as proposed in House bill No. 3234; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. RANDOLPH presented the memorial of E. F. Hatfield, jr., secretary and treasurer of the Sussex Railroad Company, representing thirty-four miles of railroad, and the memorial of Charles Hartshorne, president of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company, representing three hundred and three miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 per ton; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KERNAN. I present the petition of J. O. Driscoll, a soldier in the Eighty-eighth Regiment New York Volunteers, praying that he be granted a pension of the grade of captain. The petition is accompanied by papers showing that he was commissioned a captain and commanded his company in action, but was conditionally mustered in as a second lieutenant in order to act as a recruiting officer. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM presented the memorial of E. F. Hatfield, jr., president of the Green Bay and Minnesota Railroad Company, representing two hundred and forty-four miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton, as proposed in House bill No. 3234; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. ROLLINS presented the petition of Judge E. L. Cushing and others, citizens of Cheshire County, New Hampshire; the petition of Ira Colby and others, citizens of Sullivan County, New Hampshire; the petition of Levi W. Barton and others, citizens of Sullivan County, New Hampshire; the petition of Judge George A. Bingham and others, citizens of Grafton County, New Hampshire, and the petition of Thomas J. Whipple and others, citizens of Belknap County, New Hampshire, praying for the removal of the United States circuit and district courts from Exeter to Concord in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FERRY presented the petition of J. P. Dobbins and others, superintendents of life-saving stations in the States of Michigan and New York, praying for an increase of salary; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of M. W. Fairfield and others, citizens of the third congressional district of Michigan, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Mary A. Powers Filley and others, of Grafton County, New Hampshire, praying for an amendment to the Constitution granting to women the right to vote; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of George A. Douglas and others, members of the Grand Lodge of Good Templars of Montana, representing six hundred members, officially signed, praying for a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of the Grand Council of the Royal Templars of Temperance of Pennsylvania, representing several thousand families of that Commonwealth, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic and for restrictive legislation upon the subject; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition, signed by the pastors of the First Baptist church, of the First Presbyterian church, of the Methodist Episcopal church, the rector of the Episcopal church, and of the Evangelical church, the lieutenant-governor of the State of Pennsylvania, and by one of the presiding judges of the courts, and by citizens of Warren County, Pennsylvania, praying for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. I take this occasion to earnestly commend these numerous petitions to the attention of the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented the petition of Dilworth & Brothers, citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, praying Congress to take such measures as will prohibit the use of deleterious compounds in the adulteration of food; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have in my hand a protest against the construction of a bridge across the Detroit River at the city of Detroit, signed by a large number of the owners of vessels navigating that stream and the lakes on our northern boundary; persons who reside in Canada. As I am advised, the petition is not one to be presented to the Senate; but as the petitioners are engaged in the navigation of those great lakes and the river to be affected by the construction of the bridge, and are interested in their commerce, I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Commerce to the fact that the citizens of Canada as well as of our own country are largely interested in the commerce to be affected by that bridge, and are opposed to its construction.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I am requested to present to the Senate resolutions adopted by a convention of colored citizens held in the city of Savannah, county of Chatham, State of Georgia, concerning the Freedman's Bank. The memorialists especially desired that the resolutions which they adopted at that convention should be read in the Senate. I request that the preamble and resolutions be read, and, with the proceedings of the convention, referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

The preamble and resolutions were read, and referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, as follows:

Whereas a large number of the colored people of this and other counties deposited money in the Freedman's Bank, and lost their money by the failure of said bank, and are now in a destitute condition; and

Whereas the colored people, in placing or depositing their money in said bank, did so under the impression that said bank was not only chartered by the Government, but was actually owned by the Government, and that their deposits were guaranteed by the good faith of the nation; and

Whereas they have awakened to the sad reality that by mismanagement or misconduct of the parties in charge their hard earnings have been almost swept away from them; and

Whereas they have been informed through the papers, and more particularly from a letter received by Abraham Burke, of this city, from Hon. M. P. O'CONNOR, of Charleston, South Carolina, Representative from that State in the present Congress, that the said Mr. O'CONNOR had offered a bill in the House of Representatives, the provisions of which is for the Government to take the assets and assume the liabilities of the said bank: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That we, the colored people of the county of Chatham and State of Georgia, in convention assembled, do most heartily indorse the action of Hon. M. P. O'CONNOR, of South Carolina, and assure that gentleman that his name shall at all times be cherished with the deepest devotion and affection by the freedmen of the South.

Resolved further, That we do most earnestly and respectfully ask the Senators and Representatives in Congress to pass the said bill, which will be doing justice to the poor freedman and at the same time bring to many hearth-stones happiness and plenty where there is now only desolation and want.

Resolved further, That in order that these resolutions may reach the Senators and Representatives of Congress, the secretaries of this convention are instructed to furnish a copy to Hon. M. P. O'CONNOR and also to the Senators and Representatives of the State of Georgia, respectfully asking them to have it read in the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. HARRIS presented the petition of Francis E. Stewart, of Davidson County, Tennessee, administratrix of the estate of Michael S. Stewart, deceased, praying compensation for cord-wood sold and delivered to quartermasters of the United States Army by her late husband; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MORGAN presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, praying for the substitution of United States legal-tender Treasury notes for notes of national banks, and remonstrating against any law impairing the quality or reducing the quantity of United States Treasury legal-tender notes; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PENDLETON presented the petition of C. M. Schwarz, vice-president of the Mississippi Valley Cane-Growers' Association, and others, citizens of Illinois; the petition of A. J. Berry, sr., and others, citizens of Collinsville, Alabama; the petition of John A. Richards and others, citizens of Lenawee County, Michigan; the petition of Valentine Hamman and others, citizens of Indiana; the petition of Thomas Scantlin & Sons and others, citizens of Evansville, Indiana; the petition of R. Parker and others, citizens of Jasper County, Indiana; the petition of Ralph Collins and others, citizens of Indiana; the petition of Richard Webster and others, citizens of Chatham County, North Carolina; the petition of R. F. Jones and others, citizens of Clinton, Kentucky; the petition of John F. Ball and others, citizens of Meridian, Mississippi; the petition of C. H. Dyer and others, citizens of Chattanooga, Tennessee; the petition of Charles Wilkerson and others, citizens of Texas; the petition of W. L. Bright and others, citizens of Arkansas and Texas; the petition of W. B. Foster and others, citizens of Hope, Arkansas; the petition of B. F. Atkinson and others, citizens of Fort Smith, Arkansas; the petition of O. A. Campbell and others, citizens of Eagle City, Minnesota; the petition of John Sickler and others, citizens of Fairmount, Minnesota; the petition of Isaac Crisman and others, citizens of Iowa County, Iowa; the petition of M. P. Wells and others, citizens of Ohio, and the petition of J. J. Wayt and others, citizens of Bainbridge, Nebraska, praying for the passage of a bill for the relief of Daniel M. Cook; which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. BOOTH presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of California in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the completion of the iron-clad Monadnock; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution is as follows:

Assembly joint resolution No. 2, relative to the protection of the commercial interests of the Pacific Coast.

Whereas, owing to the great extent of the Pacific coast, the distance from the seat of Government, and great exposure of our commerce in case of war, and the inability of the Government at the present time in such emergency to supply us with proper protection on account of an insufficiency in the number of its war vessels, and as the great, important harbors of the Atlantic coast are amply provided with iron-clads and floating batteries: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the assembly, (the senate concurring,) That our Senators and Congressmen are hereby requested to use their utmost endeavors to obtain an appropriation by Congress for the completion of the United States iron-clad Monadnock, now in course of construction at Vallejo.

Resolved, That the governor be requested to transmit a copy of this resolution to each of our Senators and Congressmen.

J. F. COWDERY,
Speaker of the Assembly.
JNO. MANSFIELD,
President of the Senate.

Mr. LOGAN presented the petition of Joseph Perkins and others, citizens of Illinois, and soldiers during the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Erastus Scales and other soldiers, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of W. H. Grinnell and others, citizens of Illinois, praying for a commission of investigation into the cause and treatment of disease in domestic animals; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. LOGAN. I present resolutions of the Union Veteran Club of Chicago in reference to a bill that is before Congress, which I ask to have read at length.

The resolutions were read, and referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

Resolved by the Union Veteran Club, of Chicago, an organization numbering about one thousand men, who served in the Union Army during the late war, That we deem it unwise and inexpedient to pass the bill now pending in Congress known as the "Weaver bill," for the reason that in our judgment it will tend to disturb the business interests of the country.

Resolved, That we hereby request the Representatives in Congress from this State to vote against the passage of this bill, and that the corresponding secretary send a copy of these resolutions to Senators LOGAN and DAVIS, and to Representatives ALDRICH, DAVIS, and BARBER.

The foregoing is a true copy of resolutions adopted by a unanimous vote of the Chicago Union Veteran Club, at a regular meeting held February 9, 1880.

J. S. CURTISS,
Recording Secretary Chicago Union Veteran Club.

Mr. WHYTE. I present certain resolutions of the Corn and Flour Exchange of the City of Baltimore, which although addressed to me personally, are really intended to be laid before the Senate, urging the passage of the bill now pending in the House of Representatives for the establishment of a marine hospital in or near the city of Baltimore. I move the reference of the resolutions to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHYTE presented a memorial of John E. Bowman, Isaac N. James, and other citizens of Washington County, Maryland, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) providing for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the memorial of Henry Wood, president of the Philadelphia and Baltimore Central Railroad Company, representing fifty-seven miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails from $28 to $10 a ton; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. WHYTE. I also present the memorial of A. H. Henderson and others, late employés of the Baltimore City post-office, complaining of certain grievances, and asking the redress of the same. From the character of the memorial I think it ought to go to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and I move that reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARPENTER presented a memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of an appropriation to complete the breakwater and harbor at the entrance to the harbor of refuge in Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial is as follows:

Memorial to Congress for an appropriation to complete the breakwater and harbor at the entrance to the harbors of refuge in Sturgeon Bay, Wisconsin.

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin respectfully represents:

That the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-Canal is nearly completed, its final completion being contemplated during the year 1880.

That the United States Government began the building of a breakwater at the entrance to said canal in 1873, the estimated cost of which was $180,000, and of which sum there remains unappropriated $70,000.

That the safety of the entire shipping and commercial interests tributary to the western shore of Lake Michigan, between Manitowoc and Bailey's Harbor, a distance of eighty miles of coast, is entirely unprotected, and requires an early completion of said breakwater and harbor in order to render it available on completion of said canal.

Your memorialists therefore respectfully ask Congress to appropriate the remainder of said estimate at the present session of Congress, so that the work already commenced may be completed at an early day.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to transmit certified copies of this memorial to each of the Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin.

J. M. BINGHAM,
President of the Senate.
ALEX. A. ARNOLD,
Speaker of the Assembly.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of Elizabeth Vernon Henry of the State of New York, who is, I may say, the daughter of one of the most eminent men and lawyers of his time, praying for a pension by reason of the death of a brother in the naval service. I move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. McDONALD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 87) for the relief of John J. Key and W. G. M. Davis, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CONKLING, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 509) to amend the practice of the courts of the United States in suits against municipal corporations by abolishing the use of writs of mandamus in certain cases, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 397) for the relief of certain naval officers, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 553) for the relief of Elisha Bass, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CARPENTER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 999) to provide for the appointment of official stenographers for the circuit and district courts of the United States, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of 35 attorneys of Jackson County, Michigan, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 999, providing for the appointment of stenographers in the United States courts, reported adversely thereon, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1309) to provide for the appointment of official stenographers for the courts of the United States, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of members of the bar practicing in the United States courts in the southern and eastern districts of New York, praying for the employment of stenographers in the United States courts, reported adversely thereon, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the expediency and propriety of such legislation as may be necessary to establish a retired list of non-commissioned officers of the United States Army for a certain class named in the resolution, reported a bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. THURMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 735) extending the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PRYOR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1059) for the relief of George D. C. Hibbs, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MORGAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 850) to provide a commission for the adjudication of damages to the Norwegian bark Atlantic by collision with the United States steam sloop of war Vandalia and for payment of any award made by said commission, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan, expressing opposition to the enactment of any law limiting the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States in proceedings against municipal corporations of any State by the citizens of another State, to report it back, with the request that the committee be discharged from its further consideration. It is merely a protest against action, and being possessed of the views of the Legislature, the committee desire to get the memorial off its calendar.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 476) for the relief of Thomas M. Simmons, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 616) to promote the efficiency of the Navy, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BAYARD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 539) in relation to gifts, devises, and bequests to the United States, and the bill (H. R. No. 2046) to authorize a compromise of the claims of the United States under the will of Joseph L. Lewis, reported adversely thereon, and the bills were postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1191) for the relief of James Monroe Heiskell, of Baltimore City, Maryland, reported it without amendment.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1033) to authorize the President to detail an officer of the Navy or the Marine Corps to perform the duties of solicitor and judge-advocate-general, &c., and to fix the rank and pay of such officer, reported it with amendments.

Mr. GROOME, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of James A. Heard, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 281) for the relief of Emma G. Nelson, executrix, and Aaron H. Nelson, executor, of the estate of W. F. Nelson, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEREFORD, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Arthur Connell, of Houston, Texas, praying payment of rents received by the United States from his property in the city of Memphis and appropriated for public use, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

RELIEF FOR SUFFERERS IN IRELAND.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 80) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to equip and furnish a vessel for the purpose of conveying contributions to the suffering in Ireland, to report it with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be reported for information.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida asks the Senate to consider the joint resolution at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the proposed amendment read, to see whether the joint resolution ought to be considered now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the resolving clause of the joint resolution, and in lieu thereof to insert:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ any ship or vessel belonging to the Navy of the United States best adapted for such service, for the purpose of transporting to the famishing poor of Ireland such contributions as may be made for their relief, or to charter and employ, under the authority of the United States, a suitable American ship or vessel for the same purpose. Any sum of money which may be necessary to carry out the object of this resolution is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. CONKLING. Is this reported by a committee?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Chair hears no objection, and the joint resolution is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland."

EULOGIES UPON REPRESENTATIVE CLARK.

Mr. ANTHONY. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) for printing the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon Hon. Rush Clark, deceased, to report it without amendment and recommend its passage, and also to ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FERRY (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1332) to aid in the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie and Marquette Railroad; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. MCDONALD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1333) granting an increase of pension by way of arrears to Maria A. Rousseau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALLACE (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1334) for the relief of Charles H. Frank; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1335) to amend section 2261, chapter 4, title 32, of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BURNSIDE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to make the 23d of February, 1880, a legal holiday in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. WINDOM asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 82) authorizing the Secretary of State to purchase the manuscript of a revised edition of the Consular Regulations; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion of Mr. HARRIS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the claim of Francis E. Stewart be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Claims, there having been an adverse report, subsequent to which an additional petition, with additional evidence, has been presented.

On motion of Mr. FERRY, it was Ordered, That the papers in the matter of the claim of Rector and Russell to the Hot Springs reservation be taken from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Whereas by section 354 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, it is provided that "no person shall be appointed as policeman or watchman in said District who has not served in the Army or Navy of the United States and received an honorable discharge;" and

Whereas it is alleged that said statute has been and is now being violated, and that persons are now serving by appointment as such policemen and watchmen who never served in the Army or Navy of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a full and specific statement of the name, age, place of nativity, and date of appointment of each policeman and watchman belonging to the police force of this District; also of the service of each in the Army or Navy of the United States, and whether honorably discharged therefrom; also whether any other, and, if so, what other, military or naval service has been performed by each person on the police force, and whether any person has been at any time within two years last past appointed who has not served in the Army or Navy, and, if so, the reasons for such violation of law and the names of all persons so appointed.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask for immediate action upon the resolution.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. THURMAN. I object.

Mr. WHYTE. Let it lie over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution goes over under the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask that it be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be printed.

PUBLIC LANDS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. FERRY. I ask for the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to furnish to the Senate the amount in gross of the unsold public lands in the counties of Chippewa and Schoolcraft, in the State of Michigan, and also to state how long such lands have been in market.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the object of that?

Mr. FERRY. To advise the Senate of the number of acres of unsold public lands in the two counties named.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What have we to do with that?

Mr. FERRY. I introduced a bill by request this morning, which was referred to the Committee on Railroads. The object of the resolution is to furnish the Committee on Railroads information bearing upon the subject.

The resolution was agreed to.

EULOGIES ON SENATOR HOUSTON.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate, on Thursday of next week, at the hour of one o'clock, to allow resolutions to be considered commemorative of my late colleague, GEORGE S. HOUSTON.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. After the morning hour?

Mr. MORGAN. After the morning hour.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and unanimous consent is granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HERMAN NETTERFIELD.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will proceed with the call of the Calendar under the standing order.

The first bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 35) granting a pension to Herman Netterfield.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill be indefinitely postponed?

Mr. WITHERS. There is an adverse report upon that bill. For two days its consideration has consumed all the morning hour. I object to its further consideration in order that it may get out of the way of other bills on the Calendar.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is a private claim, just as much entitled to be heard as any other, and I think we ought to dispose of it. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration, which I believe is within the rule that we have hitherto acted upon, by which the Senate has set an hour and a half aside for the Calendar, but I am not sure about that, as I have not read the last order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion of the Senator from Vermont is clearly in order, that the pending or any other order be set aside for the purpose of considering this bill. The question is, Will the Senate consider the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. I hope that the little time that is given to the Calendar of unobjected cases will not be interfered with by this bill. Let it take its chance on the Calendar of objected cases, and let us go on with the unobjected cases upon the Calendar.

Mr. McMILLAN. The fact that this bill has led to some discussion certainly should not prevent the Senate from acting upon it now, when the matter has been discussed and when it will occupy but a short time in further consideration. I think the time consumed will be very brief. I hope the Senator from Virginia will withdraw his objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I have no objection in the world to a vote being taken on the bill; but it has consumed all the time required to be devoted to the Calendar on two days, and I presume it will do the same thing to-day if now considered; and as there is an adverse report in the case, and as heretofore an adverse report has been considered equivalent to an objection, while the motion of the Senator from Vermont is clearly in order, if the Senate choose to take the bill up, I must object to its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. . I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMILLAN. I can see no reason why objection should be interposed to this case after it has come so near a conclusion. I can see no greater reason for taking up any other case on the Calendar.

Mr. WITHERS. The Anthony rule simply provides for taking up and considering unobjected cases, and I want to proceed under it; that is all.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 25, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—25.

Allison,	Carpenter,	Jonas,	Saunders,
Blair,	Dawes,	Kirkwood,	Sharon,
Booth,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Teller,

So the motion was not agreed to.

WICKLIFFE COOPER.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the next business on the Calendar.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. No. 8) correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of War to correct so much of the record of the War Department as states that the late Major Wickliffe Cooper, Seventh Cavalry, committed suicide on the 8th of June, 1867, and to substitute therefor the words, "died by hands of person or persons unknown."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the report.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. RANDOLPH January 12, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (S. R. No. 8) "correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major of Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army," have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The Committee on Military Affairs of the United States Senate, Forty-fifth Congress, third session, after an investigation of the facts relating to the case, reported as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred Senate resolution No. 65, 'correcting the military record of Wickliffe Cooper, deceased, late major of Seventh Cavalry, brevet colonel United States Army,' report:

"This is a bill which directs that so much of the military record of this officer which shows he committed suicide on June 8, 1867, be corrected so as to show that he 'died by hands of person or persons unknown.' The record shows that this officer was found dead in his tent, on Medicine Lake Creek, near Fort McPherson, Nebraska, on or about the 8th of June, 1867, and it was supposed he committed suicide while in a fit of delirium tremens. His widow applied to Congress for a special pension, which was first reported adversely by the Senate Committee on Pensions, upon the ground that a pension under such circumstances was unwarranted by the letter and spirit of the pension laws. This adverse action was based upon the record of the War Department, and was reported January 14, 1875, second session, Forty-third Congress.

"On February 12, 1875, same session, the Committee on Pensions, having considered additional evidence, reversed their former decision and reported favorably upon the pension bill, (H. R. No. 3713,) upon the ground, as the committee say, 'that the allegation of the manner in which Major Cooper came to his death is unfounded. The habits of his life, the location of the wound of which he died, and all the attendant circumstances are inconsistent with the theory of suicide.' The record shows that the bill pensioning the widow of this officer thereupon became a law, approved March 3, 1875, (see chapter 241, page 658, volume 18, part 3, Forty-third Congress, second session, 1873-'75.) The following are the two reports of the Committee on Pensions alluded to:

"'[S. Report No. 522, Forty-third Congress, second session.]

"'Mr. INGALLS submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. No. 3713:

"'The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3713) granting a pension to Sarah S. Cooper, submit the following report:

"'The petitioner, Sarah S. Cooper, is the widow of Wickliffe Cooper. When the late rebellion broke out her husband entered the United States service as a private, in 1861; was soon made lieutenant; afterward promoted to the colonelcy of the Fourth Regiment Kentucky Veteran Cavalry, in which capacity he served till the close of the war in 1865.

"'Colonel Cooper was a brave and gallant officer, a good soldier, prompt and faithful to duty, and rendered his country important service during the late war. His commanding officers speak his praise in the highest terms. He was afterward made brevet colonel in the regular Army on account of his meritorious services.

"'In 1866 Colonel Cooper was appointed major of the Seventh United States Cavalry, in which position he served with his regiment on the western frontier till June 8, 1867, when he perished by his own hand. The evidence from the War Department shows that he committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a revolver, while in a fit of delirium tremens, on the evening of the 8th of June, 1867, while encamped on Medicine Lake Creek, about fifty miles southeast of Fort McPherson, Nebraska Territory.

"'The committee, believing that under no interpretation of the pension laws can this be brought either within their letter or their spirit, recommend the indefinite postponement of the bill.

"'[S. Report No. 653, Forty-third Congress, second session.]

"'Mr. INGALLS submitted the following report, to accompany bill H. R. No. 3713:

"'The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill H. R. No. 3713, having had the same under consideration, submit the following report:

"'Upon the 14th of January, 1875, this bill was reported adversely and indefinitely postponed. On the 21st of the same month this action was reconsidered by a vote of the Senate, and the bill recommitted for further action.

"'The claim was rejected upon the ground that Major Cooper died from the effects of a wound inflicted by his own hand during an attack of delirium tremens.

"'Additional evidence has been submitted; and, upon a review of all the testimony, the committee have reached the conclusion that the allegation of the manner in which Major Cooper came to his death is unfounded. The habits of his life, the location of the wound of which he died, and all the attendant circumstances are inconsistent with the theory of suicide.

"'Without presenting in detail the entire evidence, the committee reverse their previous action, and recommend, unanimously, that the bill do pass.'

"Inasmuch as a committee of the Senate has already examined all the facts involved in this case, and reported that this officer did not commit suicide, as stated in his military record, your committee can see no objection to the passage of this joint resolution. It only removes what is considered a stigma, and takes away a load of grief naturally entailed upon his widow and family.

"Your committee therefore recommend passage of the joint resolution."

Your committee adopt this report and recommend the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it not within the power of the Secretary of War to amend an erroneous record?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That is not the construction which is placed upon the law by the Military Committee.

Mr. ANTHONY. I have known a case where an erroneous record was amended at the War Department as to the cause of an officer's death. It was some time ago.

Mr. BECK. I will say that I applied to the War Department to have it done some time ago, and they thought they had not the power, and hence the application is made in this form.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The present Secretary of War, and I think his predecessor, have decided that no such power, under their construction of the law, is lodged with that Department; and therefore the resolution is proposed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I am in favor of the passage of this joint resolution, but I do not wish to have the Senate seem to adopt the notion that it is not within the power of the War Department under existing law to amend and correct an error that it is satisfied exists in its records in the military history of any officer or soldier, for I have recently had occasion to examine the law and it is perfectly clear to me that they have that power and that they exercise it when they are satisfied they ought to do so.

It may be that in a case of death merely the law does not extend to it. As to desertion (which was the special point that was called to my attention) the law is perfectly clear that they have that power. I have no doubt it is broad enough for this case; but it may be that the evidence which the Committee on Pensions accumulated is not evidence in the War Department, and therefore I shall cheerfully join in the passage of this resolution although I do not want it to be understood at the War Department that we think in point of law they have no power to make a correction of this kind when they are satisfied on the proof that it ought to be made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish simply to say in regard to this matter that I had a petition sent to me for the purpose of getting legislation with a view to correcting an Army record which I sent to the Adjutant-General, and he replied that if I would furnish the proof of the circumstances stated in the petition the record would be amended. I got the proof and sent it to him and he had the correction made. I know, therefore, it is the practice to make such corrections. The record was amended in the important particular of striking out "desertion," which was recorded against a soldier. The individual was reported as a deserter; and on proof being furnished to the Adjutant-General that he was not, the correction was under the law made by him. That was no longer ago than one day last week.

Mr. CONKLING. It seems to me the only possible justification for passing this resolution is the absence of power to do the thing the resolution proposes. Reflect one moment upon the consequences of the opposite view. Suppose it to be true that the Department has power by general law to make corrections of this sort, and admitting that and proceeding upon that idea we pass a resolution of this kind in a particular case, the Senate must see that it allows every claimant to resort twice over, first to the Department and then to Congress, and Congress consisting of two Houses it gives him virtually three tribunals. He may come to the Senate, take the chances of its committee, go to the House, take the chances of its committee, or go to the War Department. Certainly that should not be.

This should not be a matter of accident or favoritism. On the contrary records should be reformed, purged, corrected, verified, whatever the thing required may be, according to the merits and truth of the matter. Therefore to say that the Department has power to do this, but that we will proceed in this case to direct it to be done, is to exonerate practically the Department from the only accountability that you can ever get; that is, by imposing responsibility. I am entirely opposed to the resolution if it be presented or excused in that view. I will vote for it only upon its being shown that there is no such power now.

Mr. BECK. I will only say to the Senator from New York that I applied to the War Department twice and they assured me that they had not the power, and that the case must come to Congress, and on their assurance that they had no power to make the correction this resolution was introduced.

Mr. CONKLING. In reply to the Senator from Kentucky, I make two remarks: First, my understanding is not the understanding of the Department as to the law. My understanding is that they have power, and I remind the Senator that we can scarcely proceed upon what somebody at the War Department has said the statutes mean. We should have rather to go upon the statutes themselves, I think.

Again: The Senator appeals to his experience; I give him mine. It has a good many times behooved me, in compliance with requests, to transmit papers to the War Department making requests involving a correction of the record, and it never has been stated to me by any representative of the War Department that they had not the power. Refusals are frequent, but never that I can remember put upon that ground.

I think, Mr. President, I will venture to move that this resolution be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs in order that that committee may ascertain and report, not what somebody at the War Department has said, not what some clerk has said who has prepared a letter for the Secretary to sign as to what he thinks the law is, but what in reality the law is on this subject to the end that applications of this sort may not go entirely by favor, but may rest upon some substantial basis.

Mr. BECK. I would prefer that that should be done, because I have no official authority on the point, and if the thing can be done at the War Department I would as soon have it done in that way as in any other. If they have not the power, then I hope the committee will report a bill giving them the power.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like very much to vote for this joint resolution, but I do not see that we have facts enough before us to justify us in saying that the record as it stands at the War Department is not correct. I shall vote for the motion to recommit, and shall be very glad if the thing proposed can be secured so as to correct the record, whenever I am satisfied that the facts on which the record was made were erroneous, and that the truth is different.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I have no objection to the recommittal of the joint resolution; indeed I prefer it should be done after this debate; but I would say for the Military Committee that they have been in the habit to a greater or less extent of concurring in the opinion of the War Department as to the laws affecting that Department. It seems, however, to be the opinion of the other side of the Chamber that there is law sufficient to-day for all the purposes desired by the passage of this joint resolution. I hope therefore it will be recommitted to the committee.

The motion to recommit was agreed to.

WILLIAM ENGLISH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 332) authorizing the appointment of William English to a second lieutenancy in the Army; which was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the report, Mr. President.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. RANDOLPH January 12, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 332) "authorizing the appointment of William English to a second lieutenancy in the Army," have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The facts in this case were called to the attention of Congress by the Secretary of War in a letter dated War Department, Washington City, December 12, 1878, upon which the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate made the following report, which is adopted by your committee:

"The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referrred the letter from the Secretary of War, recommending such legislation as will authorize the President to appoint William English, late a cadet at the Military Academy, a second lieutenant in the Army, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

"The Secretary of War submits to Congress, in his letter addressed to the President of the Senate, that Cadet English was appointed to and entered the Military Academy in June, 1875, remaining there a year, when he was found deficient in mathematics, and discharged in June, 1876. The Secretary states, however, that Cadet English's failure occurred through no fault of his own, but was owing to absence from the academy on account of domestic afflictions, which caused him to fall behind his class; also, that about the time of his discharge he received the unanimous recommendation of the members of his class that he be appointed in the Army before their graduation.

"It further appears, according to the letter of the Secretary, that in consideration of the fact, and in view of the long and faithful services of Cadet English's father, the late Lieutenant-Colonel T. C. English, Second Infantry, who served for more than twenty-four years as a commissioned officer in the Army, the President, on January 3, 1877, directed his appointment in the Army, which would have been made but for the fact that the law which forbids the appointment of a discharged cadet to the Army before the graduation of his class prevented it. Another legal obstacle since intervening by act of June 18, 1878, made it impossible for Cadet English to be appointed to a second lieutenancy until the graduating class and the non-commissioned officers eligible thereto were provided for. It becomes necessary, therefore, to permit this appointment, that an enabling act be passed.

"In view of the recommendations of the honorable Secretary of War, and the further fact that the President desires to make this appointment in recognition of the faithful services for a long period of the late Lieutenant-Colonel English, Second Infantry, (the father of Cadet English,) together with the statement of the Secretary that the failure of young English to pass the examination in mathematics occurred through no fault of his own, but was owing to domestic affliction which caused his absence, and that the members of his class magnanimously waived their rights in his behalf, your committee report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill ought to be amended by striking out all relating to how he shall be assigned to duty. Let that question be left to the Army officers. I move to strike out after the words "United States," in line 6, the words:

And that said William English shall be assigned to such arm of the service in the same manner as if he had been graduated at the Military Academy, and as graduated cadets are assigned.

Mr. RANDOLPH. How will the bill read if amended?

The Chief Clerk read the bill as it would stand if amended, as follows:

Whereas the Secretary of War, in an official communication to Congress, dated December 12, 1878, recommends the passage of an act enabling the President to nominate William English, late a cadet at the Military Academy at West Point, to a second lieutenancy in the Army, which enabling act is made necessary by reason of existing laws which inhibit said nomination; and

Whereas it appears from the said communication of the Secretary of War that the President desires, in view of the circumstances of the case, to make such nomination: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized to nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appoint, William English, late a cadet at the Military Academy, a second lieutenant in the Army of the United States. And all laws or parts of laws conflicting herewith are hereby suspended, and suspended only for the purposes of this act: Provided, That the said William English shall receive pay and take rank only from the date of his appointment by authority of this act.

Mr. RANDOLPH. That will do.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I cannot understand in reading the report that was on my desk how the Secretary omitted a part of it. The letter of the Secretary of War which is embodied in the report was not read by the Secretary.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think I can explain that, if the Secretary cannot. A paper presented by the Military Committee purporting to be the report in this case was placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Senate by mistake, and immediately thereafter the proper report was placed on the table. I suppose that the report that was read by the Secretary just now is the one which came from the committee. It will be ascertained by comparison of the two that they differ in this respect only, that the report just read omits the letter of the Secretary of War, which is a mere repetition of the report itself. There is no essential fact omitted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a pretty serious precedent, though it may be entirely right. I should like to know in what class this young gentleman was when he left the Military Academy.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The report states, I think.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see.

Cadet English was appointed to and entered the Military Academy in June, 1875, remaining there a year, when he was found deficient in mathematics, and discharged in June, 1876.

So that he was only at the end of his freshman year, to use the college expression, and under the law he would have had three years more to go through, if I am right in my supposition of what the law was then. This may be the most meritorious case in the world; but it is a pretty serious step by law, in view of the organization of the Academy and the security of the Army, to say that a young gentleman who was dismissed at the end of his first year and not having had the three years of training and teaching and learning and possibility of failure on his own account, shall be put into the Army just the same as if he had graduated, because he was dismissed the first year on account of severe domestic affliction, with which of course we all sympathize. That, if I correctly understand it, is this report, that this young gentleman during the course of his first year had the sorrow and misfortune to be involved in serious domestic calamities that obliged him to neglect his studies—and I use the word "neglect" in no sense of criticism; but it obliged him to leave the Academy (that is the short of it) for a good reason, one not in the least dishonorable to him or to his capacity; but he did leave it. What would have happened to him in the three years that followed, nobody can tell. Of course it is a thing that it is perfectly impossible to solve.

Now, the question is whether Congress, however much we may sympathize with his misfortune, is going to establish the precedent of providing for an appointment in the Army as an officer of a young gentleman who has not gone through the Academy and who has not served in the ranks from which he might be promoted in certain cases. That appears to be the question, one entirely impersonal to this young gentleman whom I never heard of before and who, I have no doubt, is a perfectly worthy young gentleman. It seems to me it is a pretty serious step.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I think the Senator from Vermont misapprehends the consequences of the passage of this bill. It authorizes the President to appoint Mr. English to a second lieutenancy—just that and nothing more. Bills of a similar character giving the President the right to make similar appointments as to men who have never been in the Military Academy are frequently passed here. There are cases of appointment from civil life. This bill becomes necessary because this young gentleman served a year or thereabouts in the Military Academy, and under the existing law the President has no power to appoint him to a second lieutenancy because of his service for that year in the Military Academy and his failure under the circumstances that are indicated there. I hope there will be no objection to the bill as it stands.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to suggest a further modification, to insert the words "of infantry," in line 6, after the word "lieutenant."

Mr. MAXEY. The law provides that the cadets should be assigned to the Army according to their examination at West Point. They go into the engineers or the artillery, according to their grade in their class. The purpose of the bill as originally drawn was to give this young man, who has to pass an examination before an Army board, the right to go where his examinations would entitle him to go. In the Military Academy one going into the cavalry has such an examination as one going into the infantry; and the assignment is made to infantry or cavalry according as it is thought the young man is better qualified for the infantry or the cavalry. If the amendment is made at all as proposed by the Senator from Iowa, which I think it ought not to be, it ought to be "of infantry or cavalry."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired, and the Senate proceeds to the consideration of its unfinished business, being Senate bill No. 19.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. PADDOCK. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont at the commencement of his remarks upon this question observed that so far as he had been able to ascertain no State had yet made a demand upon the Government for an adjustment of its 5 per cent. claim on the basis named in the bill under consideration. In answer to this I undertook to say for the State I have the honor to represent in part here that there had been a demand by that State, and that the same had been continuously made for several years. To this statement by myself in support of a similar one made by the Senator from Kansas for his State, the Senator from Vermont replied rather curtly, I thought, that "the appointment of agents to hunt up claims in favor of States" was not the information he was seeking, and therefore, of course, our statements were to him valueless. I am speaking here particularly for my own State, its compact, its claim thereunder, and its demand, as represented in this bill and the accompanying report, which are antagonized by the Senator from Vermont with some vehemence, and with his usual ability, and as I have been challenged by him to produce the record of my State as to its connection with this matter of its claim I shall first of all respond to such invitation. If there shall appear to have been a formal assertion of its claim by the State of Nebraska and a demand based thereupon for such an adjustment thereof as this bill requires, I shall have answered all that the Senator from Vermont disputed so far as my State is concerned, except his argument against the committee's interpretation of the contract itself under which the claim arises. Seven years ago when the State of Nebraska was only six years of age, the Legislature thereof took formal action in regard to this and kindred claims; and here it is in substance. I read from the statutes of Nebraska the essential part of an act approved February 8, 1873, relating to the particular subject in controversy here. It is as follows:

> That the governor be, and he hereby is, authorized and empowered to appoint an agent or agents in behalf of this State to prosecute to final decision before Congress or in the courts the claim of this State for the 5 per cent. due to the same from the United States upon the land of this State disposed of by Indian reservations and by the location of land warrants and land scrip, issued for military service in the wars of the United States, and for agricultural college scrip, &c.

In pursuance of this statute the then governor of the State appointed an agent who, in the name and on behalf of the State, called personally upon the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office and invited their attention to the several subjects embraced in that act. As to the claim for 5 per cent. from the disposition of the Indian reservations taken from the body of the public lands within the limits of the State, upon the basis of $1.25 per acre, the same as if they had been sold to individuals by the Government, he made an extended argument before the Commissioner of the General Land Office which was printed and filed in the Department. The case was afterward referred to the Solicitor of that Department, who wrote an elaborate opinion thereupon recommending the adjustment of the claim as made up and presented, which opinion is on file in the Interior Department bearing date June 15, 1874. As nothing could be done with the other claims named in the statute under which his authority was derived, i. e., that embraced in the bill now before us, and that for the swamp-lands indemnity, &c., without further legislation, he sought that, and to my personal knowledge since the commencement of the Forty-fourth Congress the State of Nebraska, either in one House or the other and most of the time in both, has been diligent when the opportunity was presented to press these claims upon the proper committees.

So much for the demand of the State. And now I come to consider the compact between my State and the Federal Government under which the claim arises for the adjustment of which, in common with the claims of a similar character for other States, we seek this legislation; for in this brief discussion I shall chiefly consider this question from the central stand-point furnished by my own State.

Within the limits of the State of Nebraska there are seventy-five thousand square miles of territory—almost fifty million acres—nearly all of which is arable land. Twenty-five years ago Nebraska was altogether uninhabited except by Indians. In 1855 the pioneer began to take possession of that magnificent region. It was then valueless to the country. Out of the soil of that vast area nothing whatever was produced by cultivation to sustain human life. There was no church, nor school-house, nor cultivated field; no civilization, no commerce, no tax-payer. This was the condition of things when the work of development commenced. Neither the pioneer nor the Government alone without the aid of the other could have made any progress toward the wonderful results that have since been reached there. The Federal authority gave to Nebraska its territorial government, and the pioneer settlers furnished the intelligence and the muscle to utilize the resources that nature had so lavishly dispensed to that region.

And now let us see what the people of that State have accomplished "as partners in the concern," speaking after the manner of my friend from Vermont. From nothing whatever in 1854 Nebraska has grown to a population of five hundred thousand, with an assessed valuation of fully $100,000,000, and that, too, without assessing the vast estate of the Federal Government therein. With six hundred churches and three thousand school-houses, with a surplus from the agriculture of the past year over the requirements for home consumption of at least fifty million bushels of wheat and corn, more than five hundred thousand hogs, and three hundred thousand beeves, to say nothing of the other products of lesser importance sent out for distribution to the consumers of States less favored in these respects. Moreover, while Vermont paid for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, only $50,159.59 in internal-revenue taxes for the support of the Federal Government, Nebraska paid for the same year $876,309.81, more than seventeen times as much as Vermont in a single year. Since Nebraska was admitted as a State in 1866–'67 it has paid more than $4,000,000 internal-revenue taxes. And while Vermont during the past five years has paid less than $300,000, Nebraska has paid during the same period about $3,000,000. Beside these immense contributions to assist in feeding the people of the whole country, and these large sums to support the Federal Government and aid in reducing the principal and paying the interest upon the national debt, we have duly observed all our obligations under our contract with the Federal Government as to the public domain. We have refrained, exactly as we agreed, from levying any tax thereupon, whereas if there had been no contract of this nature which the United States has, to say the least of it, always thought it best to make for its own protection against the sovereign right of the free and independent State to determine for itself, the proper objects of taxation within its own jurisdiction and the vast estate of the nation within our limits could have been taxed for the support of the local government, for the augmentation of the school fund, and for the internal improvements necessary for the development of the State exactly as if it had belonged to an individual and on the same basis as the property of others has been taxed for these very purposes; even if we had not received from the Federal Government the endowments in speaking of which the Senator from Vermont became so overwhelmingly eloquent, we would now be in better circumstances as to our educational fund, our internal improvements, and our general assets than we are to-day by reason of these Federal aids.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from Nebraska will allow me——

Mr. PADDOCK. I should prefer that the Senator would wait until I am through.

Mr. MORRILL. I merely want to say to the Senator on one single point that if he is correct in his argument the city of New York pays more taxes than the other forty-five million people of the United States.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no controversy with the city of New York. It is with the Senator from Vermont, the senior Senator, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who has arraigned us in regard to this beneficence.

Mr. MORRILL. So far as the contributions of the State of Nebraska and the State of Vermont are concerned, if the people of Nebraska consume more whisky than the people of Vermont, they pay more internal taxes; if they do not, they do not.

Mr. PADDOCK. Nebraska consumes no more whisky than Vermont, but Nebraska produces that which makes whisky and that which feeds the people, and that upon which the taxes are laid that yield the revenue which supports the Government, which pays the national debt, which enables the Government to reduce its interest and to pay its interest. Those are the points.

But as I have said, if we had not received these endowments at all, and could have taxed all the Federal Government land, we should be in a better situation in a financial point of view; our balance-sheet would show better.

Furthermore, we insist if this forbearance as to taxation, altogether proper as it is, had not been exercised toward the Federal Government, that in bearing the heat and burden of a quarter of a century in converting a waste place into a great and prosperous State, whose civilization is of the highest type—a State that now contributes, through the industry and enterprise of its people each year so much to the wealth of the whole country, so much for the support of the Government itself, and so much to enhance the value of the remainder of the public domain, we would have a sufficient set-off for all the beneficences which are made to figure so largely against us and against the equitable accounting proposed by this bill.

Indeed, it is a proper question to submit to the political economist whether the Government and people of the United States would not have made a fair trade with the settlers of Nebraska at the outset if they had contracted to surrender their entire interest in the public lands in that State upon condition that the results already reached could then have been assured—not to speak of the immeasurably greater ones that are in the womb of the future—results in which every citizen of the United States, wherever he may be, has an interest.

Therefore, considering our contract—in the full knowledge of the benefits and advantages that have accrued therefrom to the whole country—we do not think that our interest in the public lands within the limits of the State, as such interest is defined in the bill before us, is a dollar more than we may justly and properly insist upon. The Senator from Vermont argued that the original idea of this payment of 5 per cent. on the net proceeds of the sales of public lands, under the rule that now obtains, was to produce a fund for the construction of turnpikes and other public improvements for the benefit of all the States, as well as for the advantage of the particular State to which the payment was to be made.

But I believe it is true beyond question that in each compact so made from the beginning the proper theory has been that the Federal Government received its quid pro quo through the concessions made by each State on its admission as to certain rights, jurisdictions, and privileges, concerning which from the commencement there has always been much doubt and uncertainty. In all these the essential requirements have been that the State should not interfere with the primary disposal of the soil; that the estate of the United States therein should not be taxed at all; in some of the earlier compacts that five and in others that three years' exemption from taxation for lands sold by the Government to individuals should be conceded by the States contracted with, and in nearly all cases that non-resident proprietors—speculators—should not be taxed higher than resident. The requirement as to the application of the fund thus arising for each State was, as I think, in every case inspired by what was the ruling idea of the time in the State with which the compact was to be made. As to Indiana and the others admitted before the commencement of the railroad era, so to speak—in what may properly be designated the canal and turnpike era—when the States of the interior were struggling to secure the best possible facilities then known and at command for the shipment of their products to the seaboard, naturally all were in accord, and each one, by the expression of its own wish and by its direct request, inspired the formulation of its particular compact, so that this common direction happened to be given to all the earlier-admitted States. Beyond this I think there was no idea, no method pressing upon the State from without to compel a different application of the fund than that which was agreeable to and desirable for the State itself, without reference to the wishes or the interests of any other of the States. This is clearly shown by the character of the enabling acts of the States more recently admitted.

Take my own State for illustration. Popular sentiment there demanded that the fund for the support of common schools should be increased, strengthened, and protected in every possible way, so that the schools might become free to all and as nearly as possible a burden to none. This sentiment forced itself upon the attention of Congress and demanded at its hands that the 5 per cent. fund should by our enabling act be required to be thus applied, and so it was done. I doubt if any one in Congress who voted for or against that enabling act stopped to even inquire of himself what interest his own State could possibly have in the disposition of the 5 per cent. fund for Nebraska other than to give it that direction which the best interests of that particular State seemed to demand.

But the Senator from Vermont sought to make a case against my State particularly, I thought, of special benefits conferred so excessive as to make our claim for the more liberal accounting contemplated by this bill appear to be most extraordinary. He spoke of railroad grants to the State, multitudinous in number and vast in extent. I shall not attempt to pronounce the scientific terms employed by him in his figure of speech to illustrate how great a beneficence this has been. Even my distinguished friend, learned as he is, was a little troubled in their pronunciation. Now, in answer to all this, I desire simply to say that my State, as a State, never received any grant whatever for the construction of any railroad. Not one single acre beyond the five hundred thousand acres that went to all the States under the act of 1841 for internal improvements was ever granted to Nebraska to use in aid of the construction of a railroad. Congress did make a grant of lands to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, which company Congress itself incorporated. No man living in my State had any pecuniary interest in it. Nineteen-twentieths of its original proprietorship were in New England, a large block of it is there still, and none of it is in my State.

This company finally located the road so that it was constructed through Nebraska. The company did this because the line through Nebraska was the shortest one to the Pacific, and not for the purpose of conferring any special benefits upon the State of Nebraska. A grant was also made to the Burlington and Missouri Railroad Company, a company composed almost entirely of New England people, which constructed under its grant about one hundred and eighty-five miles of road in Nebraska. Still another company, known originally as the Kansas and Northern, now denominated the Saint Joseph and Western Railroad, under a grant made to the State of Kansas direct, extended its road a short distance into our State. If these grants had been made to the State of Nebraska it is possible that a better disposition would have been made of some of them. But it is due to truth to say that one of these companies, the Union Pacific, has built in Nebraska of roads tributary to its main line, without aid from the national or State governments, nearly as many miles as the entire length of its main line in that State, while the Burlington and Missouri has constructed and now operates more than four hundred miles in addition to that for which its grant was made. Finally, of the sixteen hundred miles of railroad in Nebraska less than one-half (eight hundred miles) were constructed by land-grant aid.

But even if these grants had been made direct to us for the purpose of constructing that part of the Pacific line within the limits of Nebraska, it could not truthfully be said that it was intended as a special beneficence to my State. The interests of Nebraska were not thought of in connection with that great national undertaking. And, as I said the other day in answer to a remark made by the Senator from Vermont, it is a question whether it would not have been better for us in the long run if those two grants had not been carved out of the lands in our State. But be that as it may, I acknowledge no specially intended benefit to my State from those grants. Every State and section of the Union was directly interested in the construction of those roads, and it was upon that theory and that only that the grants were made. I shall not, therefore, permit the Senator from Vermont to charge them up specially to the account of our State because, forsooth, topographical and other considerations brought them that way in making the long-prayed-for railroad connection between the Atlantic and the Pacific.

The Senator from Vermont undertook to charge to the special account of the newer States the liberal policies now obtaining in respect to the disposition of the public lands. In the words of our distinguished friend, the senior Senator from Ohio, "this won't do." Every intelligent citizen of the United States long since became convinced that the best interests of the whole country demand that the public lands shall be disposed of to the actual settler who will cultivate the same and thus contribute his share to the gross products of the whole country, or plant and cultivate forests upon the nude plains of the West, the influence of which upon our climate, our agriculture, and the general health cannot be overestimated, provided the results of the industrious efforts of the settler in this direction shall prove to be equal to the promise that now encourages him. This policy has come to be adopted by the Government and accepted by everybody everywhere as a better one than the original rule of selling the public lands in vast tracts to non-resident speculators, which was a virtual exclusion of the poor man from the overcrowded districts of the Eastern States from the public lands, upon which now, if he have pluck and energy and industry, he may go and make a home for himself and his children. In all this New York and Vermont and every other State of the East and South has a common interest with Nebraska and Kansas and the others of the great West. Therefore, I repeat, there has been nothing done in the way of beneficent legislation to aid in placing the poor man in possession of the public lands in the newer States for occupancy and cultivation of the same, and nothing in the endowments of new States in order that there may be extended to him wherever he may be the advantages of education, or through public improvements to afford him the facilities for sending the products of his farm to the central markets of the country, that has not been for the common good of all in the East as in the West, and I insist that the Senator from Vermont shall not charge all these things to our account as a proper set-off to the demand made in this bill for an equitable adjustment of the claim therein presented.

But the Senator from Vermont argues that the exchange of the public lands for military warrants or scrip is not a sale thereof, but is in the nature of a "barter" transaction. Undoubtedly the very learned definition of the term "sale" given by that Senator is correct. Nevertheless usage—older than the oldest Senator in this Chamber—has placed the land warrant in such close relationship with money—indeed it has so long stood for, represented, been treated in these special transactions as money—that admitting the theory of the Senator that the term "sale" means a disposition of a thing by the seller to the purchaser thereof for money to be correct, as it certainly is in a technical sense, yet if we observe this definition no less carefully than it has been observed during the past twenty years in this country, we must yet concede that the disposition of the public lands for land warrants or land scrip may properly and safely be denominated "sales" under the definition thereof given by our distinguished friend from Vermont, than whom no one here or anywhere is more able, more honorable, or more anxious to be just.

Always in our history, accordingly as the country was prosperous or depressed and there was an active or inactive demand for lands for use agriculturally, warrants have possessed a special money value or purchasing power recognized in the money market exactly as the greenback so long as it was irredeemable, had a general purchasing power regulated by the demand for its use according to the volume of legitimate business in which it could be profitably employed. Both were evidences of indebtedness. One represented so much service rendered the Government by an individual who imperiled his life for its defense, and was redeemable in land; the other represented so much material furnished or so much labor performed or service rendered by somebody, and was redeemable, not presently as was the land warrant, but at some future time which could not be definitely named, when the Government should be able to redeem it in the technical money of the Constitution. Now suppose that the exact money of the Constitution wherewith to redeem the greenback could not ultimately be obtained because of great business depression, or perhaps absolute bankruptcy, and the holder thereof should be compelled to take from the Government public lands in liquidation thereof, would this final result render the innumerable transactions in which it had been theretofore used as money barter transactions? Suppose Congress had given to the land warrant, which was the obligation of the Government to pay so much land, a general legal-tender capacity to the extent of $1.25 for each acre of land it called for, would it not have possessed even a better money character than the greenback itself, for the reason that it would have been presently redeemable in something that had an inherent value almost or quite equal to the nominal value of the warrant itself? Other certificates of indebtedness of different kinds were issued during the late war which did not possess the legal-tender capacity, were not presently redeemable in anything, and yet would any one say that if the Government, as it undoubtedly many times did, had received these certificates in payment for the public lands, that such transactions were not "sales?" And yet they were in a technical sense very little nearer to what we understand to be the true money of the Constitution than is the land warrant.

Now it is a matter of fact that land warrants and land scrip have always been held and been treated by the banks of the country as cash items—cash in hand. Custom has made them money in a special sense. The land warrant had for many years a daily quoted cash value exactly as the certificates of indebtedness of one kind and another during the war, and afterward had their quoted cash value when deposited in the strong-boxes of the money-changers.

And to-day land warrants are no more open to the objection that they are not money for the special use to which they are put than the certificates of indebtedness were for the general use to which for a long time they were put. Indeed they are treated as money by the Government itself in these very transactions in which they are specially used. A one-hundred-and-sixty-acre land warrant will buy just as much land as the exact sum of money demanded by the Government in such sale if the purchaser requires the land, has the money, and does not possess the land warrant. It is of the same value to the Government as $200 in money, because it is the promise of the Government that it will receive it in payment for the same amount of land that it could and would under the law sell for $200 in cash if there was no warrant. And to this extent it is a special legal tender.

Moreover, in the States where the exemption from taxation followed the land for three or five years, as the case may have been, after the Government had parted with its title to the individual, the fact that the rule of exemption obtained and was recognized by the Government the same whether the lands were sold for warrants or for cash, is a recognition by it of the principle from which it ought not to be permitted to depart when it is making up the other side of the balance-sheet.

But the principle is perhaps more clearly recognized in the law as it now stands, and the practice of the Department thereunder at the present time in respect to one class of warrants. The act of September 28, 1850, volume 9, Statutes at Large, at page 520, provides that warrants shall be located upon the public lands subject to sale at private entry. The act of August 31, 1852, Statutes at Large, volume 10, at page 143, provides that military scrip issued in lieu of Virginia military warrants shall be received in payment for public lands at the rate of $1.25 per acre. Upon the latter, which in every essential respect are the same as the former, issued originally by the United States, the 5 per cent. is paid. Their value to the owner is just the same. The obligation in regard to them as to the amount and kind of land to be given for them is the same. In all particulars both classes of obligations are treated alike except in this, that because the term "located upon the public lands" is used in the act of 1850, in defining their use, and the words "payment for public lands" is employed in the act of 1852 in the same connection, therefore the lands disposed of under the latter are treated as cash sales, upon which the 5 per cent. is actually paid, while upon the former it is not paid.

Now, this is the thinnest possible distinction without a difference, and it ought, in justice to the States named in this bill, to be removed. It is a legal absurdity. But the executive officers of the Government must observe the distinction. Numerous other acts in support of the theory that warrants have been treated as money in their relation to these public land transactions have been cited by other Senators, notably by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. ALLISON,] and I need not call attention to them. For these reasons, and many others that have been given here, or might be given, I am most emphatically in favor of this bill.

In conclusion, permit me to say to you, Senators from Eastern States, you will make no mistake in allowing questions like this to be adjusted on the broadest and most liberal principles of interstate comity. This bill if passed will involve no increased taxation to anybody. Indeed, my State alone will pay the whole sum required by this bill in four years in its Federal taxes, if you will so direct the use thereof. We feed you and you clothe us. Your supplies will be none the dearer, nor more difficult to obtain, and our apparel no more expensive because of increased import duties if this bill shall become a law. Moreover, by this enactment you will have disposed of a question that long hath vexed us all.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I do not think this bill ought to pass, and I shall very briefly indicate some of the reasons for my opinion.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the quantity of public lands entered by the location of military scrip and land warrants in the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Oregon, Nevada, and Colorado. He is to ascertain the entire quantity of all public lands in these States ever granted for military services; and the bill then directs that there shall be paid to these States respectively 5 per cent. of the value of the land estimated at $1.25 per acre. This is to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury in cash, or he is to issue United States obligations bearing interest with which to pay it.

Mr. President, the quantity of land which has been granted for military services is very large. Land has been granted to soldiers who have served in every war carried on by the United States to and including the Mexican war. It has mostly been granted not in pursuance of any promise by the Government to induce them to enlist or volunteer, but as a gratuity for the patriotic services of the soldiers and sailors. As bearing upon some of the arguments urged by the supporters of this bill, arguments that we really granted this land in payment of an obligation contracted with the soldiers, and that therefore it should be treated as a sale of the lands, I ask the Secretary to read sections 2425 to 2428, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes. Those sections will show whether it is not true that a very large portion of all the land granted was a donation to soldiers and sailors in recognition of their patriotism and services, and not payment or fulfillment of a previous obligation or promise on the part of the United States. I ask the Clerk to read sections 2425 to 2428.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2425. Each of the surviving persons specified in the classes enumerated in the following section, who has served for a period of not less than fourteen days, in any of the wars in which the United States have been engaged since the year 1790, and prior to the 3d day of March, 1855, shall be entitled to receive a warrant from the Department of the Interior, for one hundred and sixty acres of land; and, where any person so entitled has, prior to the 3d day of March, 1855, received a warrant for any number of acres less than one hundred and sixty, he shall be allowed a warrant for such quantity of land only as will make, in the whole, with what he may have received prior to that date, one hundred and sixty acres.

SEC. 2426. The classes of persons embraced as beneficiaries under the preceding section, are as follows, namely:

First. Commissioned and non-commissioned officers, musicians, and privates, whether of the regulars, volunteers, rangers, or militia, who were regularly mustered into the service of the United States.

Second. Commissioned and non-commissioned officers, seamen, ordinary seamen, flotilla men, marines, clerks, and landsmen in the Navy.

Third. Militia, volunteers, and State troops of any State or Territory, called into military service, and regularly mustered therein, and whose services have been paid by the United States.

Fourth. Wagon-masters and teamsters who have been employed under the direction of competent authority, in time of war, in the transportation of military stores and supplies.

Fifth. Officers and soldiers of the revolutionary war, and marines, seamen, and other persons in the naval service of the United States during that war.

Sixth. Chaplains who served with the Army.

Seventh. Volunteers who served with the armed forces of the United States in any of the wars mentioned, subject to military orders, whether regularly mustered into the service of the United States or not.

SEC. 2427. The following class of persons are included as beneficiaries under section 2425, without regard to the length of service rendered,

First. Any of the classes of persons mentioned in section 2426 who have been actually engaged in any battle in any of the wars in which this country has been engaged since 1790, and prior to March 3, 1855.

Second. Those volunteers who served at the invasion of Plattsburgh, in September, 1814.

Third. The volunteers who served at the battle of King's Mountain, in the revolutionary war.

Fourth. The volunteers who served at the battle of Nickojack against the confederate savages of the South, Fifth. The volunteers who served at the attack on Lewistown, in Delaware, by the British fleet, in the war of 1812.

SEC. 2428. In the event of the death of any person who would be entitled to a warrant, as provided in section 2425, leaving a widow, or, if no widow, a minor child, such widow or such minor child shall receive a warrant for the same quantity of land that the decedent would be entitled to receive, if living on the 3d day of March, 1855.

Mr. KERNAN. Now, Mr. President, it will be observed that a very large number of these beneficiaries were never promised any land at all. The Government wisely and properly from the beginning has been accustomed from time to time to grant a portion of the public lands to our soldiers and sailors as an honorable gratuity for their services. It was not granted in payment of any debt or legal obligation of the United States. The soldiers had served without any such inducement from the Government.

I am informed, and I believe it is true, that more than 90 per cent. of all the lands taken under military scrip and land warrants was not given in fulfillment of any promise or contract by the United States with the soldier to induce him to serve. This bounty extended to the wagon-masters and the chaplains, and to all who served as soldiers even for a few days. It was properly given to them by the Government as a gratuity over and above their stipulated pay in recognition of honorable and patriotic service.

I believe that such a policy is a wise one, and that it was right and proper thus to recognize the services of our citizen soldiers and sailors; but, sir, to argue that when we granted this land to them we were paying them a legal debt or any debt which the Government had incurred by contract or previous promise, I think is erroneous.

I have said this because it is claimed that the States named in this bill come here to enforce a contract with the Government by which the United States agrees to pay to these States respectively 5 per cent. of the value of the lands granted to the soldiers and sailors and which were situate within these States respectively. What is the language out of which they say this contract springs? In the enabling acts which permitted the several States named in the bill to come into the Union, Congress declared that the United States would pay to the States respectively 5 per cent. on the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands in the State. The argument is, that when the United States granted some of that land as a gratuity to the soldiers for patriotic services, long or short, when there was no pledge in advance of the services to give lands in addition to the pay the soldiers got, such a donation was a sale of the public lands within the meaning of the enabling statutes. I should like to ask my friends to take the language, "5 per cent. on the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands," and tell us what were the "net proceeds." How will you estimate the net proceeds on a bounty land warrant giving a soldier one hundred and sixty acres of land?

Mr. JONES, of Florida Will the Senator from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. KERNAN. In one second I will yield. I only allude to this in order to call attention to what the parties to the contract, the United States and the State, at the time understood to be a sale on which the States were to have 5 per cent. Now I will hear the Senator from Florida.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask the Senator what he understands to be the measure of the obligation entered into by the Government of the Union with the respective States. In other words, does the Senator think that after having stipulated to pay to the States 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands the Government of the Union would be at liberty to make any other disposition of those lands so as to prevent the payment of the 5 per cent.?

Mr. KERNAN. I will answer my friend, who is a good lawyer. If the language meant, as is contended, that the United States was a trustee in equity to sell the lands for the benefit of the State the United States were bound to sell every acre and pay the State 5 per cent. of the proceeds; but on the contrary I insist this language means what I argue it means, both parties so understanding it, that where we sold these lands in the ordinary way we would pay the State 5 per cent. on the net proceeds which we received for them. I say that was the understanding of the parties to the contract, and I say so because at the time these enabling acts were passed it was a well-known fact that the United States was in the practice of selling for money a portion and of donating for various public purposes a large portion of these public lands. When they gave away the lands for a public purpose it was for the benefit, or supposed to be for the benefit, of all the people of the United States, the new States as well as the old. I think the makers of these laws understood the contract to be that when we sold the lands, and the money came into the Treasury, we would pay over 5 per cent. of the net proceeds to the States; but where we donated lands for the building of a canal for the public good or as a reward for the patriotism of the soldiers or for other public purpose, we were not to pay any percentage on account of the land to the States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I wish to ask one more question, for I am seeking light myself on this subject.

Mr. KERNAN. I have no feeling about the matter except to state my view, and I will answer any question that I can.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. There were enough land warrants issued to cover up all the public lands in some of the States, had they all been located in any one State. I put the question to the Senator, if all the bounty land warrants which were issued to soldiers for military service had been located in the State of my friend from Iowa, under the authority of Congress, and if there had been no lands left in that State to sell, whether in the face of the stipulation entered into between the United States and Iowa in 1846, when she was admitted into the Union, that State would have had any claim for compensation on the General Government on account of that contract?

Mr. KERNAN. I will answer the Senator. After Iowa was admitted her representatives were here. If the Government had been selling the public lands for money elsewhere and giving all the lands away in that State to the soldiers, it would have raised a claim against the United States that the Government was not dealing justly; but nevertheless that would not be a sale of the public lands in Iowa within the meaning of these statutes, in my judgment.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President——

Mr. KERNAN. Please let me get through. You Senators are familiar with these land laws, and I only want to state my view briefly.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely desire to call the Senator's attention to a fact, but I will wait until he gets through.

Mr. KERNAN. The Senator may call my attention to any fact, if that is his only purpose.

Mr. LOGAN. I desire to ask the Senator how he construes the act of Congress passed in 1855, and the subsequent act passed in 1857, in reference to the States of Alabama and Mississippi, in which it is provided that a settlement shall be made between the Government and those States in reference to the 5 per cent. we are now discussing, and that all reservations within those States, naming certain Indian tribes, shall be accounted for according to the number of acres in those reservations, at $1.25 per acre, in the settlement of this 5 per cent. claim. I merely ask how the Senator construes those laws.

Mr. KERNAN. I have not read those statutes, and will give no opinion upon them.

Mr. LOGAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will read them.

Mr. KERNAN. I prefer not. The Senator from Alabama, [Mr. PRYOR,] who intends addressing the Senate, will no doubt refer to those statutes. I have not looked at them.

Mr. LOGAN. I will state the idea to which I wanted to draw the Senator's attention.

Mr. KERNAN. If the Senator will allow me to proceed briefly with my statement it will be better.

Mr. LOGAN. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I merely wished to state the construction of the law.

Mr. KERNAN. I want Senators sitting here to place themselves in the situation of those who passed these enabling acts and those who accepted them. They were all familiar with the fact that the Government was accustomed to donate the public lands for various purposes, giving them largely as a reward for the patriotism of soldiers and sailors. There is no language in these statutes which imported that the Government bound itself not to continue to donate portions of the land to our soldiers; and there being these two modes of disposing of them, the one by sale for money—the ordinary way—the other by donation, my judgment is that both parties understood that we were to pay the 5 per cent. on the net proceeds of the public lands sold in the ordinary way for money, and that we were not to take out of the Treasury and pay to the States 5 per cent. on the value of the public lands that were given for a canal or a railroad, much less on the lands which were donated to the soldiers of the Republic. I may be in error, but such is my firm conviction.

I am confirmed in this view by the information which I get, that for a very long time, and down to a comparatively recent period, these new States, having their representatives here who joined in the action which was had by Congress as to donating these lands to soldiers and to other parties for public purposes, made no objection to these donations and no claim that we ought to pay them 5 per cent., or any other per cent., on the value of the lands which were entered with military bounty warrants, or which were donated for other public purposes to corporations or to parties. It was read in our hearing yesterday that as late as 1858, on such a claim being made by one of these States, the Secretary of the Interior answered that the Department did not understand that lands located with bounty land warrants were sales within the meaning of these acts of Congress. If the States coming in understood this, surely a claim would have been made earlier; they would have made the claim to the United States, "You are a trustee for us to the amount of 5 per cent. of the value of these lands; you must either sell them and give us 5 per cent. of the net proceeds, or if you give them away, like any other trustee, you must pay us the same as though you sold them at their market value."

The language of the statutes is significant. It is not that the United States shall pay 5 per cent. on the land in the States disposed of by the Federal Government, but they shall pay to the States respectively 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of lands sold. The language is so quoted in the very bill before us, "5 per cent. on the sales of public lands," and I do not think it would be construed to import the contract now contended for by any court of law or equity. We have gone on year after year from the time the first new State was admitted until now, selling land and paying over to the States 5 per cent. of the net proceeds from year to year of the lands sold only, and no claim was made by the States and no recognition by the United States that there was any right at all to have anything on account of lands that were donated to soldiers for their patriotic services and for other public purposes. We have this practical construction of what the contract was and is.

I deny that there was any such contract as is now claimed. I deny it on the fair construction of the language used. I deny it on the interpretation of the language practically by both parties making the compact for years. I deny it on the ground that for years we have gone on paying them 5 per cent. of the net proceeds and there was no claim that land warrant locations should be included, and the first time it was made, in 1858, it was disputed by the United States. If this be not so, the United States is equally bound to pay the 5 per cent. to these States on land that was granted for any public purpose.

Therefore, Mr. President, while I would deal liberally and generously with these States, while I would be particular not to violate the public faith with any one of the States, it seems to me that no disinterested party who will examine the language of these statutes and the practical interpretation given to them by both parties for years will think for one moment that the United States is bound in law or equity to pay these States the money now claimed. No one will understand that the United States are bound by a contract to pay the States named 5 per cent. on the land that was donated as a gratuity to the soldiers of all the wars from the revolutionary war down to the present time.

I do not believe that all the Senators from the States named in this bill will vote for it. I do not think that they will feel that they should call upon the United States Treasury for 5 per cent. upon the value at ten shillings an acre of the lands granted to the soldiers who defended us all. It was the common mode of recognizing, over and above their mere pay, their honorable service; it was the practice which was known to exist when the statutes were passed, and it never was regarded by any one as a sale of the public lands. They were always called bounty lands. The soldiers did not buy them, and the Government did not sell the lands to the soldiers. The lands were donated by the old States and the new to show their gratitude to the soldiers.

But if there is to be a bill in equity filed by the States against the United States at this late day to enforce this alleged contract and to charge us with this 5 per cent., I think the account ought to be stated on both sides. How much of the public lands have been donated since they were admitted to the very States named in the bill? I called at the General Land Office and made a verbal inquiry on the 12th, when this bill was first being discussed, and I asked the Department to give me, if they could with substantial accuracy, the quantity of land granted by the Federal Government to the States named in the bill under consideration, and here is the answer:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 12, 1880.

SIR: In response to your personal request of this date I have the honor to hand you herewith a statement of the amount of public lands granted by Congress to the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Florida, Oregon, Nevada, and Colorado for the purposes named.

The amounts given under the respective grants are not claimed to be officially correct, but they approximate as nearly thereto as the short time allowed for their compilation would admit of.

Hon. FRANCIS KERNAN,
United States Senate.

And the quantity given here as granted by the Federal Government to the States named in the bill since they came into the Union is 164,059,498.37 acres.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator state what that quantity of land would be worth?

Mr. KERNAN. Estimating it at ten shillings an acre it would be worth about $200,000,000.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Will the Senator state what the amount of a one-cent tax per acre upon the whole public domain of the United States lying within the same States would be?

Mr. KERNAN. I have not calculated it and cannot state. But this is a statement of the grants for various purposes to the new States named in this bill. Under the agricultural college act it was 1,785,646 acres.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Did not New York get her share of that?

Mr. McDONALD. The agricultural college grants were made to all the States.

Mr. KERNAN. This is a statement of the grants of land to the States named in the bill.

Mr. McDONALD. The agricultural college scrip went to all the States, and New York got her portion.

Mr. KERNAN. There was no land granted to New York when Ohio came in.

Mr. McDONALD. But there was scrip granted to New York for agricultural college purposes, and located in the western country.

Mr. KERNAN. Every State got that, but these new States got far above that and beyond it. That constitutes 1,785,646 of the 164,059,498 acres granted to the States named in this bill. Then there were granted to deaf and dumb asylums in the States named in this bill 44,971 acres. There were grants to these States for schools and universities 62,301,398 acres, the grants to these States for seats of governments and public buildings 197,952 acres; approved for wagon-roads in these States 1,271,656 acres; approved in aid of railroads, not including grants to corporations, 34,292,397 acres. These were grants to the States named in the bill to aid in building railroads in those States.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Every alternate section.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not know what it was.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the only way land was granted for railroads.

Mr. KERNAN. Then the swamp selections amount to 46,780,913 acres; there have been granted for internal improvements in these States 12,403,054 acres; approved for ship and other canals 4,424,073 acres; approved for salt springs 557,436.18 acres.

There is the quantity of land granted to these States by the United States since they were admitted to the Union. The Federal Government has very properly been liberal, and granted to these States lands to aid them in building canals and railroads, and for other public purposes.

Now do not misunderstand me. I am not complaining; I am not saying it was not right to do all this; I would vote for it myself probably. I am only stating it as part of the history to show how the Government has dealt with the lands in these particular States; to show that the United States donated to these new States very largely the public lands situated in them, instead of selling them and paying to these States only 5 per cent. of the proceeds.

Mr. McDONALD. This bill does not count what was given away for school purposes, &c.

Mr. KERNAN. I understand that, but I will ask my friend from Indiana if we were trustees to sell the lands and give the States 5 per cent. of the money, and we chose to give them to some company that was building a road in the State or to give them to the State to use in building that road, were not both parties to the compact parties to that grant?

Mr. McDONALD. I do not say we were trustees to sell the land for the benefit of the States in which the lands were located; but I do say that those States entered into a compact with the United States by which the States gave up the right of control over these lands, and the right of taxation and sale, in consideration of their receiving this percentage on the sales. As to my own State, among other things we gave up the right to tax these lands for five years after entry, and to that extent the land-warrant entries were embraced as well as everything else.

Mr. KERNAN. I do not think that will tend to convince any one that when your contract, made with full knowledge of the mode of dealing with the public lands by the Federal Government, said that the Government would give you 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the lands in your State, we are bound to give a percentage on the value of the lands we donated to the soldiers and sailors who had served in the Army of the Union. I do not think it is a fair construction of this contract to claim that the United States were bound to sell every acre of the land owned by these States, and that they could not use any of it for public purposes. The argument of the friends of this bill goes to this extent.

Mr. McDONALD. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if the same clause of exemption from taxation for five years on sales of lands embraced entries made by land warrants, are we not entitled to the 5 per cent. on those sales as much as on the cash sales? We stipulated not to tax these lands for five years after the day of sale.

Mr. KERNAN. How much of the public land did the Government donate to your State in the very bill admitting your State—how many sections for particular purposes?

Mr. McDONALD. But we stipulated that after sale they should remain free from taxation for five years. The term "sale" is used in the enabling act, in reference to which we have the right to call for the 5 per cent.; and the same clause which requires us not to tax these lands for five years has been held to exempt from taxation lands entered by warrants. Now, I say that where this exemption applied, the withholding of the right of taxation to that same class of lands, our right to the 5 per cent. attaches.

Mr. KERNAN. Will my friend answer why did not some of the citizens of the States who came in under these acts, who saw this going on, suggest years and years ago that we owed them a percentage on account of the entry of bounty lands?

Mr. McDONALD. It has been so suggested, I think.

Mr. PADDOCK. For twenty years.

Mr. KERNAN. In 1858, when the claim was suggested, it was disputed and denied.

Mr. McDONALD. The Senator must remember that before 1850 a very small amount of land was entered with land warrants. It is since that period that this question has become important, not before. In 1858 the Senator himself says that the claim was made, and by the accounting officers was rejected.

Mr. KERNAN. But there was no proposition then, or till quite recently, to have laws enacted by Congress for the payment of this claim, the validity of which the officers of the United States then denied.

Mr. McDONALD. In 1857 there was an act passed which it is claimed the accounting officers from that day to this have disregarded.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, this bill now under discussion seems to me to be objectionable, both as regards the Government and the State of Alabama, in this: it seeks to establish an indebtedness of about $4,000,000, as has been estimated, as due from the Government of the United States to the States named in the bill, not in equal but in different amounts, as will appear from the records of the Department of the Interior showing the number of acres of land in the several and respective States mentioned in the bill upon which military scrip and land warrants have been located, and to be estimated as the bill requires at the rate of $1.25 per acre, and this to be done, in my opinion, upon very doubtful grounds at best, if any. This bill, if passed, exposes the Government hereafter to like demands. That is to say, for all lands donated or appropriated heretofore, or to be hereafter donated or appropriated to railroads, canals, homesteads, and to whatsoever they have been or may be donated or appropriated, if they have been or shall be the lands known as the public domain, culminating in enormous sums and ending in disaster to the whole country, Federal and State.

The clause in the latter part of the last section of the bill, which provides that the receipt on the part of the States of the benefits secured in the bill shall operate as an estoppel for all such claims, is an admission that such claims could and might be made against the Government, and is suggestive of the same. And the provision that the States shall be concluded from making the claims is likewise an admission of the enormity of the amount of and for which the Government might, could, or should be made liable. And if this bill becomes a law a precedent will be established for similar claims and allowances, for it will be observed that the advocates of this bill have relied greatly upon the previous legislation of Congress as regards the subject-matter of this bill for and as a recognition of the rights they assert under this bill, and if it becomes a law it can and will be urged and claimed that this is a legislative ascertainment of this character of claims. The provision of estoppel in the bill, in my opinion, would not operate successfully, so as to prevent other applications for other and further pay and allowances, for the reason that the passage of this bill would establish the right and justice of the claim, the principle, and it could and would doubtless be urged, and Congress most likely would be asked to relieve them of the strictly legal effects of the estoppel, and that right and justice should prevail, and not exclude those rightfully entitled under the shelter of an estoppel forced upon them to secure a part of their rights, and it is not extravagant to say it is more than likely Congress would yield, and in thus yielding would let in the flood.

The first section of the bill is inconsistent and in conflict with the second section and the proviso of the second section in this: the first section makes the claims payable out of money not otherwise appropriated in the Treasury, and by the second section certificates of indebtedness running twenty years are to be paid, or given in payment of the specified claims; and the proviso leaves it to the option of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay in money or certificates. Not only this, but it leaves it to the discretion, to the option, of the Secretary of the Treasury to pay said amounts in whole or in part, without specifying in the event that he could not pay all to each, whether in case of the payment of part he should prorate the payments equally between these several and different States holding said certificates of indebtedness.

The bill not only establishes a debt against the United States to the amount mentioned, and with such amounts as may be added to this bill by amendments or other bills hereafter, but an interest-bearing debt at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, when the safety and policy of the Government should be to reduce its debt, especially its interest-bearing debt, and lessen the taxes on the people.

This bill is, and will prove to be, likewise, in my opinion, unprofitable to the State of Alabama in this: the amount taken out of the Treasury to pay the claims set up in this bill will have to be replenished by the States, which means taxes on the people of all the States in proportion of their taxable subjects, whether direct or indirect. And upon a fair investigation of what Alabama gets, and what it will have to pay back in the shape of taxes to replenish the Treasury, under the operations of this bill, the latter will amount to more than Alabama's proportion under the provisions of the bill. The amount Alabama would get as the bill now stands, from the best estimates, is about $70,000 in twenty-year certificates, with the right to draw semi-annually interest at the rate of 3.65 per cent. per annum, the principal, $70,000, at the end of twenty years. And under the law governing this fund as regards Alabama it is strictly a trust fund—a fund to be applied alone to works of internal improvement within the State, such as railroads and canals; for, by the act of Congress of 1841, amending the act of 1819, the whole 5 per cent. is to be applied within the State, and specifically required to be used for roads within the State, and cannot be used or applied to any other purpose, and the State of Alabama, by the acts aforesaid, is pledged to such application. Now, the corpus of this claim ($70,000)—and more so when only the interest can be obtained until the expiration of the twenty years, when the certificates absolutely become due and payable—is and will be too small to accomplish anything of value or importance in the way of internal improvement in the State to which alone it can be applied. This being true, it would likely be and become a bone of contention, and the cause of great expense to the State charged with management, control, and disposition of it. The cost of legislation which would likely occur as between the various roads being constructed and contemplated, as well as the claims of roads already built—claiming the same under previous legislation—would be greater in my opinion than the sum it would get under this bill.

The long silence on the part of Alabama as to this claim admonishes me that it either did not know of its existence or did not believe it was entitled to it, especially when it is fair to presume that its representatives in Congress voted for the very laws that disposed of the lands, upon the disposition of which 5 per cent. of the proceeds, rated at $1.25 per acre, are claimed in this bill, and which laws are now urged as authorizing the claims. Why, sir, it would seem to me if these laws are used as evidence to bind the United States, they should likewise bind morally, if not legally, the States whose representatives voted for them. Alabama has been the recipient of valuable land grants and appropriations to works of internal improvement within her territory. And now to turn around and claim this exceedingly doubtful pay, and deal with the family of States as strangers upon a debtor and creditor account basis, is inconsistent with the relation that one State bears to the others and to the Federal Government, which latter is but the creature of their own creation. It is the duty of the General Government to help, aid, assist, and respect the authors of its existence; and on the other hand it is the highest interest and duty of the States to abstain from all demands the effect of which is to involve the United States and to press an already burdened Treasury.

Therefore, Mr. President, for these and other reasons, I do not favor the passage of this bill. The States needing assistance had much better do as they have heretofore done: come here and make known their wants; and they will, as heretofore, not go away empty; ask as before, and they will receive; knock as before, and it will be opened unto them if the Government is able.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the resolution for a special committee on the interoceanic canal.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. With the permission of the Senator from Georgia I would say that nearly two days ago the floor was taken for me on this question.

Mr. GORDON. I shall be very glad to yield to my friend if he will renew the motion I have just made when he closes.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I cannot promise that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The Senator from Georgia will have to move to postpone the present and all prior orders for the purpose indicated.

Mr. GORDON. I understand this to be a privileged question.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not understand it to be a privileged question to ask the Senate now to consider the motion to reconsider while there is an unfinished order before the Senate. While I should like very much to accommodate my friend, the Senator from Georgia, by having that motion considered, I think that this special order should continue to engage the attention of the Senate until it is disposed of. There are other questions and other matters that are pressing very earnestly upon the attention of the Senate which are delayed by the pendency of this special order. I had greatly hoped we might dispose of it to-day, and I think possibly we may take some of the important votes to-day yet; but I feel compelled to object to the proposition of the Senator from Georgia, and unless a majority of the Senate otherwise direct, I shall certainly have to object to the consideration of any other business than this, unless that business shall be decided to be a privileged matter.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to make a report from a committee. ["No objection."] I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to make the 23d of February, 1880, a legal holiday in the District of Columbia, to report it back without recommendation. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] introduced it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Inasmuch as it will take but a moment to consider that, I beg to ask its immediate consideration. The object of the resolution is to make Monday next a legal holiday in this District, inasmuch as the 22d of February comes on Sunday. That is now the law in most of the States. I have introduced the resolution to make it so in the District of Columbia for this year only, so that a law making it so for all future time, if Congress chooses, can hereafter be passed. I desire now the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I think it better that the question before the Senate should be disposed of.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I did not know this would cause any discussion. The time is at hand when action should be taken on it. It is a short resolution, and can be reported readily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. KIRKWOOD. We had better go on with the regular order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think the resolution should go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made, and the joint resolution will go on the Calendar.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator from Georgia has intimated that he desires to call up the resolution which had passed the Senate some weeks ago, and a motion to reconsider which was entered by myself. I should be as glad to have that disposed of as the Senator from Georgia would be; but I do not think it is, as the Senator has stated, a privileged question over the matter now before us. My own thought is that it will have to take its chances. A majority of the Senate can decide when to consider it. It is not a privileged question.

Mr. GORDON. My friend will allow me to say that I did not understand the pending bill was a special order when I made that point. I am informed by the Senator from Indiana that the bill now pending is a special order. I was not aware of that when I made the suggestion.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senate undoubtedly can make any order it sees proper, or take up any question by a majority vote; so there is no need of a question on that point; but I believe that the bill now pending ought to be disposed of, and I suggest to the Senator from Georgia whether we cannot fix some time on which the motion to reconsider his resolution may be acted on. I consider that it is due to the Senator, and due to the country, that action should be taken; the only question is, when? I am ready, and have been ready from the day the motion was entered to the present hour, to consider it, and so has the Senator from Georgia been, I understand; but it has not been disposed of from the fact that there has been a special order pending nearly ever since, and neither the Senator from Georgia nor myself could well call up the resolution. Now, if the Senator from Georgia will name any particular time, and the Senate will agree to make it a special order, it will be very agreeable to me.

Mr. GORDON. I am perfectly willing to say that this matter can go over so far as my wishes are concerned, to be taken up at the end of the discussion of the present bill, whenever it shall be disposed of, which I hope will be during the day.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Florida to yield one moment. I desire to call the attention of the Senate in connection with what the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PRYOR] has just said, to the fact that in 1855 Alabama secured the passage of a law, to be found in the tenth volume of the Statutes, page 630, by which Alabama received her 5 per cent. not only upon lands already sold but including also Indian reservations belonging to the Chickasaw, Choctaw, and Creek Indians, so that whatever may be said with reference to the other States the State of Alabama has been reasonably diligent in securing what she conceived to be her rights in this regard.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, and Mr. MORGAN rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. JONES, of Florida. I have the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator from Florida desires to proceed with his remarks I shall not interpose now.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Does the Senator wish to address the Senate?

Mr. MORGAN. Merely to reply to the Senator from Iowa; but I shall not ask to do so now.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. Mr. President, the interest of this question has been sufficiently manifested by the very many able speeches we have listened to since it has been before the Senate. I said yesterday that I intended to make a few observations in explanation of an amendment now lying upon the table which I propose to offer to this bill. That amendment is founded, as I think, in a spirit of equity. We are not sitting here as a great court of law to measure the nice legal obligations of the Government of the Union to the governments of the States. We are not invested with any judicial power. Whatever we do here, we do it in the exercise of a great legislative authority to deal broadly with questions, not as a court of law deals with them, not as a court of equity deals with them, but as the sovereign authority of the United States can alone deal with them, not hampered down by any little technical interpretations of a statute, but to do substantial justice if the case presented requires that justice shall be done.

Much has been said by the Senator from New York [Mr. KERNAN] on the technical meaning of the word "sales." I am not here to pass upon that in my character as a lawyer; I am not here to say exactly whether the location of bounty land warrants, and the appropriation of the public domain under them, amount to what he would as a lawyer or a judge sitting on the bench call a technical sale. The question is larger and broader than that. It is whether or not the Government of the Union has dealt fairly with these States in disposing in this way of land from the sale of which she had solemnly stipulated she would pay to these communities 5 per cent.

Take the case of the five land States of the South to which my amendment peculiarly applies, and nobody will pretend to say, no man can say, that the location of homestead settlements upon those lands amounted to a sale; and yet is any man so lost to justice, to right, to equity, to every consideration that ought to move the exercise of an impartial mind, as to hold that when those lands were all withdrawn from the market in 1866 and tied up for ten years, so that not one of those States could get a single dollar from the sale of an acre of them, that was a thing to be tolerated and upheld? Suppose the same thing had been done just after these States were admitted into the Union. Take the case of my own State: she was admitted into the Union in 1846, and in her enabling act it was distinctly stipulated that in consideration of the abandonment on her part of the right to tax the public property of the United States lying within her jurisdiction she was to receive 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands then lying within her jurisdictional limits. Now, suppose that a year after the admission of the State the Federal Government, in direct violation of that compact, went to work and by a law passed here withdrew all those lands from market, and, while enjoying the benefit of the contract so far as the State could make it, had said, "We will dispose of these lands in a way that no lawyer can call a sale, so that you will not have any claim upon us for our 5 per cent.," and if that State came before the Congress of the United States to ask for that 5 per cent., in equity would she be met with the objection on the part of the distinguished representatives of the other States here that there had been no sale? Is that the kind of ethics that is to prevail here? Is that the way in which a great sovereign power is to fulfill its engagements? Because you cannot make out a sale in each particular case after one party has rendered it impossible for a sale to take place she is to have no claim at all!

There is a principle involved here. It does not matter whether these lands were sold within the technical definition of "sales" or not. The question is whether there is any equity to treat them for the purposes of relief as sales, and to say to the States, "We agreed to pay your 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the lands; but we found in the exercise of our wisdom that it was necessary for us to make other dispositions of them, but at the same time we are ready to account to you as for a sale." Suppose the United States had reserved all the lands for some grand public purpose, so that we could not sell them; the interests of the Union required that they should be set apart for some national object compatible with the interests, the honor, or the welfare of the nation, and the State should come to the Government, would you not say to her, "You are entitled to 5 per cent. of the sales of these lands; the exigencies of the Government required that we should not sell them." Will any man say that the State in that case would have no claim, not to the bounty, for it was not bounty, but for that "pound of flesh" which the Government of the Union had distinctly promised to the government of the State?

The Senator from New York in his very candid argument awhile ago went on to say that there ought to be a general adjustment in order that we might be able to strike a balance, a bill in equity ought to be filed, so that upon the one side it might be seen what these States had already received from the General Government before they were permitted to make any further claim. He followed up the argument that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] made in his place the other day, that the public domain of the United States which had been given to the respective States of the Union for public purposes was so much lost to the general interest of the country. Is it possible that that narrow view of statesmanship is to prevail here? What man can say that the millions of acres of land given to the States of the West, the land States, have not contributed toward the wealth, the prosperity, the grandeur, and the happiness of the people of the whole Union? From whence do you draw your taxes? From whence do you derive those vast resources of government which go to swell your national strength? Is it from the barren soil untilled, uncultivated, unpeopled; or is it not from the living energy, the flesh and blood of the vast mass of population which you have settled there under your bounty and your liberality, and through whose ability and exertion the great temple of power on this continent has been built up?

Do you tell me that if these concessions had not been made at all, the Government of the Union, on the principle of the argument, would be richer than it is, that it would have millions of acres of land valued at a dollar and a quarter an acre? That is the hankering idea which is dragged into this debate to tear down what argument is presented in behalf of the States. But will any man say in his place in the Senate to-day that if every foot of land which was donated to the States of the West and the States of the South were now in possession of the Government untilled and unpeopled, it would contribute toward the wealth of the Union one iota what it now does toward the general prosperity of the whole people?

We hear it said "we gave you lands to build railroads and canals." So you did. But what were those railroads and canals used for? Well did Mr. Webster say in one of his fine arguments in his place in the Senate years ago, in advocating the improvement of the falls at the head of the Ohio River, that in voting for it he felt that he was serving Massachusetts as much as he was Kentucky or Ohio. He felt that every steamboat which navigated the Mississippi River laden with precious cargoes of manufactured goods from New England was benefiting his people just as much as the people of the immediate locality in whose presence and in whose State the improvement had been made.

No, Mr. President, it is a mistaken idea that the States within whose limits there is to be found no public land have never been benefited by these donations of the public domain to the States within which the public domain is located. I have heard of narrow ideas with respect to State rights; but this is about as narrow a view of that subject as has ever been taken; and unless there is some calculating power at the seat of Government which can trace the mysterious operations of commerce and the reciprocal benefits resulting from the interchange of the products of agriculture for the articles of the manufacturing region and to show how much has been done by public improvements in facilitating the interchanges between all the sections of this country, the advantages going here and going there from them, we shall never be able to see how much wealth, how much good has resulted from the improvements in consideration of which these bounties or these grants were made.

One would have supposed from the argument of the Senator from Vermont and the argument of the Senator from New York that a railroad in Indiana, or in any other State, whose construction was aided by a grant of public land never carried a pound of freight which was purchased in the great city of the latter Senator's State. Where would New York be to-day, I ask him, if it were not for these great public avenues and thoroughfares which have been made and created in other States by the aid of public bounties and public grants? He would be hemmed in within the limits of a little provincial city doing a system of local trading that never would have redounded to the building up of such a city as he has now within his State. There is nothing in that argument, Mr. President.

Those grants of land which were made by the General Government to the States in consideration of the construction of canals and railroads did not go into the treasury of those States, did not go to lighten the burdens of their tax-payer one iota, were not appropriated to pay any public officer or to diminish in the least any of the expenses of local government. They went, it is true, to facilitate, as I said awhile ago, the exchange of the vast productions of this people and to enable the country to grow rich by that system, which it has done. If any man were to take the time to look into the vast amount of our internal exchanges going on every day, sweeping first in one direction and then another, over railroads which have been built by grants of land and by public bounty, he would be astonished at the magnitude of that commerce and to see how insignificant the foreign commerce of the land is when compared with it. Figures would hardly present it in an intelligent shape, sweeping from the West to the East and from the East to the West over a perfected system of public works created by the enterprise, by the bounty, and by the energy of this great people. And am I to be told in the Senate of the United States that any aid which is usually given by a grant of land either from the State or the General Government has no tendency to enrich this people and to enrich the Government itself, which is nothing beyond the people?

Mr. President, it has been said that the States surrendered nothing. I contend that they have surrendered a great deal; and as far as I am informed, in every case they have stood by their contract. For those grants of land which were made by the General Government to them to aid in the construction of canals and railways, they have fulfilled all the conditions of those grants, and the public of the United States and the Government itself are the beneficiaries. There is no offset to come in there, then, according to the argument of the Senator from New York, because the States have fulfilled their agreement. They dedicated those public works to the uses of the public. They built them so that the goods of my friend's constituents could be transported over them and sold to advantage in the western market, and that New York might become, as it has, the great shipping port of America to transport the millions of bushels of wheat which annually find an outlet in her great harbor. She has had her advantages, grand and inestimable, from those local works even in the States of my friends from Iowa and Nebraska who sit before me; and I believe that if the account could be taken New York and the Eastern States in reality would be found to have derived more advantage from these very local works in the West than the States themselves within whose borders they were constructed.

Therefore I say there is no foundation for this claim of set-off. The States received these lands coupled with a trust that they should devote them to the construction of public highways, roads, railways, and canals for the general public of the Union, and they have fulfilled their obligation; but when it comes to the other part of the compact, that is a different thing. The Government of the Union, especially in the case of the States of Iowa and Florida, distinctly agreed that in consideration of the relinquishment of the power of State taxation over the public lands within their limits she would give to them 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the public lands within those States. I am not now to be entrammeled with any difficulties growing out of the other questions. Those grants that were made in consideration of the construction of the works were one thing. The grant which was made in consideration of the relinquishment of the power of taxation over the rest of the public domain is another and a very different thing.

Sir, this is not entirely a new question in the Senate of the United States, and I am glad to be able to find on record the opinion of a great New England statesman to show the injustice that has ever been done to the land States by the States that did not have any public lands within their borders. One of the first utterances of Mr. Sumner in this body was on that subject. He went into the question of the power of taxation; he admitted it as an existing power, and he said here in his place that had the States not given it up the Government of the United States would have been called upon as a great landed proprietor to pay to them a reasonable tax per annum on every foot of the public domain within their limits. He estimated a reasonable tax at one cent per acre per annum, taking into account what had been paid by other land-owners, and he summed up in his speech a vast debt against the Government of the Union, which up to this time has never been discharged in equity and will not be discharged even if all that is claimed for by this bill shall be paid. Take the public domain of the United States to-day, distributed as it is among five land States in the South and I do not know how many in the West, and see what a vast amount of property this Government owns within the limits of those Commonwealths; estimate its value for the last fifty years. It has been determined that notwithstanding the frequent sales of land the vast majority of the public domain remains twenty-five years in the possession of the Government before being sold. The estimate was made by Mr. Sumner up to 1849, and he shows in his speech, which I have before me, that up to that period at least, notwithstanding all the grants made for schools, for asylums, for various public objects, there was a debt according to his estimate of over $100,000,000 due from the Government of the United States to the States of the Union within whose limits the public lands lay.

Nobody ever questioned the right of the Government to enjoy exemption from taxation with respect to all the great agencies of government. Everything appertaining to its sovereign functions is exempt, and no lawyer in this country since the decision in the celebrated case of McCulloch vs. Maryland ever contended that any Federal agency whatever could be taxed by the States. But even in that case, or in one that arose shortly after and grew out of it, the Supreme Court of the United States decided that while the Bank of the United States as an agency of the Government of the Union, necessary to administer its fiscal affairs, could not be taxed by the State of Maryland, the real estate owned by the same bank was liable to taxation, because it was no part of the sovereign agency necessary to carry out the great functions and affairs of government.

Dock-yards, arsenals, all the means necessary to carry on the Government, are exempt; but I contend that in principle and in right the Government had no right to hold a foot of land as an ordinary proprietor within the limits of any State of this Union without paying taxes for it to the government which was called upon to protect it the same as the property of all other people. It was benefited by the roads, by the school-houses, by every description of improvement which was created by taxes levied upon the people of the local communities, while the people in the non-landholding States were never called upon to contribute toward any such improvements that went to the benefit of the General Government.

I am a little wearied, and I ask the Chief Clerk to read what Mr. Sumner said in 1852 on this subject, the passages which I have marked.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

According to this estimate 289,761,954 acres proclaimed for sale have been absolutely free from taxation during the space of twenty-five years, and yet during this whole period have, without the ordinary consideration therefor, enjoyed the protection of the State, with the advantages and increased value from highways, bridges, and school-houses, all of which are supported by the adjoining proprietors under the laws of the State without assistance of any kind from the United States.

Such is the extent of this immunity. But in order to determine its precise value it is necessary to advance a step further and ascertain one other element; that is, the average annual tax on land in these States; for instance, on the land of other non-residents. There are no official documents within my knowledge by which this can be determined. But after inquiry of gentlemen, themselves landholders in these States, I have thought it might be placed, without chance of contradiction, at one cent an acre. Probably it is rather two, or even three, cents; but, desiring to keep within bounds, I call it merely one cent an acre. The annual tax on 289,761,954 acres, at the rate of one cent an acre, would be $2,897,619; and the sum total of this tax for twenty-five years would amount to $72,490,475, being the apparent value of this immunity from taxation already enjoyed by the United States; or, if we call the annual tax two cents an acre instead of one cent, we have the enormous sum of $144,980,950, of which the United States may now be regarded as trustees in equity for the benefit of the land States.

But against this large sum I may be reminded of reservations and grants by the nation to the different States in question. These, however, when examined, do not materially interfere with the result. From the official retrns of the Land Office in 1848, (Executive Document, Thirtieth Congress, second session, H. R. No. 18,) we learn the precise extent of these reservations and grants down to that period. Here is the exhibit:

This is all. In the whole aggregate, only a little more than twenty million acres have been granted to these States. The value of this sum total, if deducted from the estimated value of the franchise enjoyed by the nation, will still leave a very large balance to the credit of the land States. Estimating the land at $1.25 an acre, all the reservations and grants will amount to no more than $25,788,257. Deducting this sum from $72,490,475, and we have $46,702,218 to be entered to the credit of the land States; or, if we place the tax at two cents an acre, more than double this sum.

This result leaves the nation so largely in debt to the land States that it becomes of small importance to scan closely the character of these grants and reservations in order to determine whether in large part they have not been already satisfied by specific considerations on the part of the States. But the stress that, in the course of this debate, has been laid upon this bounty, leads me to go further. It appears, from an examination of the acts of Congress by which the land States were admitted into the Union, that a large portion of these reservations and grants was made on the express condition that the lands sold by the United States, under the jurisdiction of the States, should remain exempt from any State tax for the space of five years after the sale. This condition is particularly applicable to the appropriations for common schools, universities, seats of government, and salines, amounting to 12,105,093 acres. It is also particularly applicable to another item, not mentioned before, which is known as the 5 per cent. fund, from the proceeds of the public lands, for the benefit of roads and canals, amounting in the whole to $5,242,069. These appropriations being made on specific considerations, faithfully performed by the States down to this day, may properly be excluded from our calculations. And this is a response to the Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Underwood,] who dwelt so energetically on these appropriations, without seeming to be aware of the conditions on which they were granted.

That I may make this more intelligible, let me refer to the act for the admission of Indiana. After setting forth the five reservations and grants already mentioned, it proceeds:

"And provided always, That the five foregoing provisions herein offered are on the condition that the convention of the said State shall provide by an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that every and each tract of land sold by the United States from and after the 1st day of December next shall be and remain exempt from any tax laid by order of any authority of the State, whether for State, county, or township, or any other purpose whatever, for the term of five years from and after the day of sale."

This clause does not stand by itself in the acts admitting the more recent States, but is mixed with other conditions. I will not believe, however, that any discrimination can be made between particular land States, on the ground of a difference in their conditions which may properly be attributed to accidental circumstances. The provision just quoted is found substantially in the acts for the admission of Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, and Arkansas. So far as these States are concerned, it is a complete consideration, in the nature of satisfaction, for the reservations and grants enjoyed by them. It also helps to illustrate the value of the permanent immunity from taxation belonging to the United States, by exhibiting the concessions made by the United States to assure this franchise to certain moderate quantities of land during the brief space of five years only.

After the constant charges of squandering the public lands and of partiality to the land States, I think all will be astonished at the small amount to be entered on the debtor side in the great account between the States and the National Government. This consists of grants for internal improvements, in the whole reaching to only 8,474,473 acres, which, at $1.25 an acre, will be $10,593,091. If this sum be deducted from the estimated value of the immunity from taxation already enjoyed by the United States, we shall still have upward of $60,000,000 surrendered by the land States to the nation; or, if we call the annual tax two cents an acre, more than double this sum.

In these estimates I have grouped together all the land States. But, taking separate States, we shall find the same proportionate result. For instance, there is Ohio, with 16,770,984 acres proclaimed for sale down to January 1, 1849. Adopting the basis already employed, and assuming that these lands continued in the possession of the United States after being surveyed and proclaimed an average period of twenty-five years, and that the land tax was one cent an acre, we have $4,192,725 as the value of the immunity from taxation already enjoyed by the United States in Ohio. From this may be deducted the value of 1,181,134 acres, being grants to this State for internal improvements, at $1.25 per acre, equal to $1,476,367, leaving upward of two millions—nearly three millions—yielded by this State to the nation.

Take another State, Missouri. It appears that down to January, 1849, 39,685,609 acres had been proclaimed for sale in this State. Assuming again the basis already employed, and we have $9,908,900 as the value of the immunity from taxation already enjoyed by the United States in Missouri. From this may be deducted the value of 500,000 acres, granted to this State for internal improvements, which, at $1.25 an acre, will amount to $625,000, leaving upward of $9,000,000 thus yielded by this State to the nation.

I might in this way proceed with all the land States individually; but enough has been done to repel the charges against them, and to elucidate their peculiar equity in the premises. On the one side they have received little—very little—from the nation; while on the other side the nation, by strong considerations of equity, is largely indebted to them. This obligation of itself constitutes an equitable fund, to which the land States may properly resort for assistance in their works of internal improvement, and Congress will show an indifference to the reasonable demands of these States should it fail to deal with them munificently, in some sort, according to the simple measure of advantage which the nation has already so largely enjoyed at their hands.

Against these clear and well-supported merits of the land States the old States can present small claims to consideration. They have waived no right of taxation over lands within their acknowledged jurisdiction; they have made no valuable concessions; they have yielded up no costly franchise. It remains, then, that, with candor and justice, they should recognize the superior—I will not say exclusive—claims of the States within whose borders and under the protection of whose laws the national domain is found.—Sumner's Speeches, edition of 1856, pages 24-30.

Mr. JONES, of Florida. It will be seen from this extract that, according to the very frank admission of Mr. Sumner, who was in his day, as we all know, a man of great power and weight in this body, a worthy representative of New England, up to 1849, after striking the account in the most equitable manner possible, and recognizing as he did this right of taxation which was relinquished by the State, there would have been in its absence a demand in equity against this Government for more than $100,000,000. But in case the States deliberately gave up that right, and gave it up in consideration that the Government of the United States would devote the public domain lying within their limits to sale so that they should get 5 per cent. of the net proceeds, it was never thought that after this relinquishment of the sovereign power of taxation by the local communities, which was admitted to exist by the most impartial jurists in the land, then the Government of the Union would go to work and by indirection dispose of these lands in a way which gave the States no legal claim to the amount stipulated to be paid them, no legal claim, as the Senator from New York would express it. There were here all the elements of a fair and honorable contract; there were parties capable of contracting, there was a subject-matter, and there was a valid consideration, bringing it within the alphabet of Blackstone, to say nothing of those high moral considerations that are supposed to operate upon governments outside of all the little technicalities of law which are intended only for individuals. But, even testing it by the strict legal standard, there were all the elements of a contract with these States, and there it is. I am not quarreling because the Government thought proper to devote these lands in any other manner from that in which she said she would dispose of them. Not at all. I recognize the presence always of great exigencies and necessities to control the policy of a great government like this, and when it is necessary, in order to enable her to discharge the high duties of her position, she has to break away from contracts solemnly entered into in order to do it. Then surely she cannot complain if the parties who feel themselves aggrieved should come here and claim some recompense for the violation.

Suppose it became necessary in the fulfillment of some treaty stipulation that a large part of the land in the State of Ohio or some other State should be ceded to a foreign power for the benefit of the people of the whole Union, after it was agreed that the Government should sell that land and pay to the State 5 per cent. upon it, would anybody hold that because of such a necessity as that, imposed upon the United States by an unforeseen emergency, she could rid herself of the obligation entered into with the State to whom she had agreed to pay a stipulated sum to be derived from the sale of that very territory? In the case of the States affected by my amendment the lands, as we all know, were withdrawn from market arbitrarily in 1866, so that not one foot of the public domain within the five States of Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas could be disposed of except under the provisions of the homestead law for the period of ten years. There was the obligation of the Government remaining on the statute-book trampled under foot, in which she had engaged to pay to those States, as she had in the case of the States of the West, 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of these very lands.

But it has been said there was no sale. When a contracting party by the exercise of his own volition and his own power places himself in an attitude to render impossible the performance of his contract, what, I ask you, would be his plea in a court of law founded upon such a ground as that? What would be said to the ordinary individual who came into court to set up a failure to comply with his engagement which was brought about by his own voluntary and self-imposed disregard of the contract? Would the court listen to him? Even in the case of supervening accident, and even in the case sometimes of Divine interposition, the party is not exonerated. The act of God will not do it; the act of man cannot do it. No sales! If there were not any sales why did you change the law? It was done without the consent of the States. Admit that a public emergency demanded it, does that exonerate you from the obligation of making compensation for the violated contract?

Mr. President, I said awhile ago that this subject was one that demanded a broader view than had been taken of it by some gentlemen who have participated in this debate. The subject of the disposal of the public lands cannot be dealt with upon the principle of an ordinary huckster keeping a running account of a little grocery store's operations. That idea prevailed for a long time on the other side of the water; and if there was anything more than another that contributed to the building up of this great country and making it what it is, it was the breaking down of those narrow, feudal ideas that existed in the mother country and in the countries of Europe for generations, previous to the settlement of this land. I think it is due to the celebrated political philosopher, Mr. Burke, who first made war upon this little, narrow system by which it was argued that every foot of land owned by the government was evidence of so much wealth instead of poverty, that I should refer to his utterances. Speaking on this subject in his place in Parliament, when the narrow views I complain of were entertained by the law-makers there with reference to this very country, he uttered this language, which is a text for any argument that can be made on the subject.

> Lands sell at the current rate, and nothing can sell for more. But be the price what it may, a great object is always answered whenever any property is transferred from hands which are not fit for that property to those that are. The buyer and the seller must naturally profit by such a bargain; and, what rarely happens in matters of revenue, the relief of the subject will go hand in hand with the profit of the exchequer.
> * * * The revenue to be derived from the sale of the forest lands will not be so considerable as many may have imagined, and I conceive it would be unwise to screw it up to the utmost, or even to suffer bidders to enhance according to their eagerness the purchase of objects wherein the expense of that purchase may weaken the capital to be employed in their cultivation.
> * * * The principal revenue which I propose to draw from these uncultivated wastes is to spring from the improvement and population of the kingdom; events infinitely more advantageous to the revenues of the Crown than the rents of the best landed estate which it can hold.
> * * * It is thus I would dispose of the unprofitable landed estates of the Crown—throw them into the mass of private property—by which they will come, through the course of circulation and through the political secretions of the state, into well-regulated revenue. * * * Thus would fall an expensive agency, with all the influence which attends it.

Mr. President, everything that has been done by the General Government in pursuance of a liberal policy toward the States in land matters has been vindicated by experience; and the truth of Mr. Burke's principle has been shown. Hence, I say the Government of the United States has nothing to complain of because of what she gave. She is reaping to-day the full fruition of her bounty in an enhanced population, in a prosperous and contented people appreciating and loving the grand system of liberty under which they exist.

Mr. President, I have already trespassed so long upon the Senate, and so much longer than I intended, that I hope the Senate will pardon me, and I will now take my seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. Mr. President, if no other Senator desires to address the Senate upon this question, and the Senate would prefer to take a vote upon the motion of the Senator from Vermont now, I will abstain from saying anything, and I possibly may find an opportunity to speak in the future. If no other Senator, however, desires to speak I can, I think, in the short time left of this day's session, say all that I care to submit. If the Senate will indulge me for fifteen or twenty minutes, I will say my say now.

I wish to confirm in the strongest manner that I can the remark made by my colleague [Mr. ALLISON] the other day when he addressed the Senate, that so far as the State of Iowa is concerned she does not come here asking alms. Her Senators here do not support this bill because they think it gives to her that to which she is not entitled, but solely and only because her people believe, her Senators believe that in plain, naked good faith she is entitled to every dollar, to every penny of the money that will go to her in case this bill shall become a law. I believe myself that her claim to this money is just as strong, is just as well grounded, is just as honest as is the claim of any man in all our land who holds a bond against this Government. I hold that it would be quite as unjust, quite as unfair, quite as unmanly to repudiate the one debt as the other.

It has been said that we did not make our demand soon enough. I did not know but that the Senator from Vermont might require us to have taken a notary public along with us and protested the Government of the United States on the day after it failed to pay over the 5 per cent. on the first thousand acres. We are not in the habit of looking at questions of this kind in that way where I live. After a period of some five years, during which from one-third to one-half of the land entered in Iowa was taken up by bounty land warrants, in 1858 the State of Iowa, seeing what was being done and how she was suffering wrong, did move in this matter, sent her governor here to inquire at the proper office of the Government why it was that this contract between her and the United States was not fulfilled. He was told that the officers of the United States did not understand the contract as we did. We got that information in the fall of 1858 or the beginning of 1859. Soon after that what is sometimes called "the late unpleasantness" occurred. The attention of the people of Iowa, however it might have been elsewhere, was taken up with other matters than money making for a number of years. We did not see fit to press our claim against the Government of the United States when it was struggling for its existence, and we did not see fit to present our claim against the United States until after the struggle was over and the finances of the country got into a condition when it could do that which we deemed to be justice to us. Then we came and asked it, and then we were told that we were too late.

I have not had time, my other engagements having prevented, to look into the various statutes affecting other States that are concerned in this bill. My colleague has done that to some extent, and I propose to leave that to what he has said and to what others have said upon that question. But I propose to examine some other matters.

It is said that if this bill be passed giving us now the 5 per cent. upon the value of the lands entered by military land warrants at a dollar and a quarter an acre we shall come in after awhile and ask 5 per cent. on the amount donated to the State for railroad purposes and school purposes and various other purposes. We hold it to be a sufficient answer to say that by the terms of the law we agreed not to do that thing, because by the terms of the law as it will be if it passes we do agree that we shall do no such thing. I do not think the people of Iowa could find any man in their State to take the very honorable position of a Senator on this floor from that State who would in the face of that stipulation ask to have that thing done.

But look at the matter in another sense. Senators say we have received lands for railroad purposes. True, we have. The Senator from Vermont in speaking of Nebraska the other day seemed to consider that in granting those lands to railroads the Government of the United States had been excessively liberal to the people of Iowa and the people of Nebraska. Did the Government of the United States lose a penny by the grant? She gave away alternate sections and doubled the price of the remaining sections. Just as many dollars went into her Treasury as if she had not made the grant and had sold the lands at the original price of one dollar and a quarter an acre. We have received our 5 per cent. upon all that land, both that retained by the Government and that given to the railroads, and we do not ask it twice over.

Congress granted land for educational purposes for the benefit of Iowa. The Senator from Vermont does not himself claim it to have been for the exclusive benefit of Iowa, but it was for the benefit of the whole country. In receiving that grant we have received certainly our share of the benefits. It is rather a far-fetched argument, I think, to make a proposition of this kind in the face of the plain stipulations of the law that we are considering and in the face of the considerations that I have named.

Let us look now at this matter in the light of a contract. The Senator from New York has spoken upon this subject somewhat closely and pointedly. It is a contract. The Government of the United States agreed to do something, and the government of the State of Iowa, for instance, agreed to do another thing. It is not claimed that Iowa did not do what she agreed to do. The two parties having made these stipulations, thereby a contract was entered into. I will assume, then, because it has not been denied, that Iowa has done all she agreed to do by the terms of the contract. Has the United States done the same? The Senator from New York, and, as I understand him, also the Senator from Vermont, claim that although it was agreed as one part of the promise made by the United States that she should pay to the State of Iowa 5 per cent. upon the proceeds of the land sold, that did not deprive the Government of the power of disposing of the lands otherwise than by sale, and for any purpose to which she might choose to devote them, and further, that when she thus chose to do something else with the lands than sell them for money, the State of Iowa had no claim upon them. In broad terms, that would amount to saying that when the State of Iowa bargained with the United States, that State expected to receive something from the sale of public lands, the 5 per cent., but it was left in the power of the Government of the United States to say whether the State should receive anything or not. If the Government of the United States can, by devoting the lands to certain purposes, deprive the State of Iowa of 5 per cent. upon one-third of them, or one-half of them, or three-fourths of them, the United States can just as well deprive the State of the 5 per cent. upon the whole of them by devoting the whole of them to some other purpose, and not selling any of them for money.

Do you suppose that was the bargain as understood by the people of Iowa, and as they had the right to understand it? I do not claim that the Government could not dispose of the lands otherwise than by selling them; but I do claim that when she agreed that Iowa should have 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of these lands she encumbered all of them, and that when she devoted any of them to any other purpose than a public sale for money, we have her good faith pledged that 5 per cent. upon the value of that land shall go into the treasury of the State for the purposes named in the original contract between the State and the United States. When that contract was made Iowa had an interest in every acre of public land in the State. The United States held the title with the trust attached, and although the Government might devote it to any purpose it pleased just as much as before the contract was made, it did it with the understanding and contract that it should pay to the State of Iowa as much of the proceeds as if it sold the land for money.

It has been said—the Senator from Florida has spoken to that point as fully as it need be spoken to—that really the United States took nothing by her part of the contract; that although the State agreed not to tax for its use the public lands in the State, yet there was no need of that stipulation because the State could not have done it anyhow; and so perhaps with other stipulations of the contract contained in the acts of admission. The United States did not so understand it. It was at least a mooted question whether the State could tax or not; and the abandonment of a mooted claim, the settlement of a mooted question, is in itself a consideration as good as any other consideration can be for a promise that is intended to be kept faithfully and manfully.

The great bulk of the lands entered by land warrants in Iowa were entered by what were called Mexican land warrants. A large portion of those warrants were issued as bounties, not for services rendered but to be rendered. The United States wanted soldiers to enter the army warring with Mexico. She said to them, "If you will volunteer to serve the United States during this war we will give to each one of you one hundred and sixty acres of land." Instead of saying, "We will give you a bonus, or a bounty, of $100 in money, or $200 in money," the United States said, "We will give you a bounty, or a bonus, of one hundred and sixty acres of land." They contracted with the soldiers to do that thing. The soldiers went forward and entered into the Army and rendered the service, the country derived the benefit of it, and now it is said that that grant of lands was not a sale!

Let me illustrate my idea upon this subject, especially with reference to warrants that were issued for past services. The question whether or not we shall equalize the bounties given to the soldiers of the last war has been pressed upon the attention of Congress and will be pressed again. A bill equalizing their bounties passed Congress some years ago, I do not remember how long, but failed of the President's approval because, as I have understood, the then Secretary of the Treasury believed that the condition of the Treasury was such that it could not stand the strain that would be brought upon it if that bill became a law. But the question is here again, and will continue to be here. Many of the soldiers of the Union Army during the late war would prefer to-day to take a land warrant instead of a money bounty. Suppose that in view of the present condition of the Treasury it should be thought best instead of paying, as the proposition now is, a money bounty, that there should be given to them a land bounty, and in that way their claim against the United States should be settled without taking money out of the Treasury of the United States, would Senators claim that because Congress saw fit to retain the many millions of dollars that an equalizing bounty law would take out of the Treasury and to pay in land instead of money, therefore an undue share of that payment should fall upon the States in which public lands are yet to be entered?

We gave bounty land to our soldiers. Nineteen-twentieths of the value of that land comes out of the common fund, is paid by the people of the old States and paid by the people of the new States alike, but the other twentieth, the 5 per cent., it is proposed shall be paid by the State only in which the lands may be located by virtue of those warrants. It is thrift in the old States to have their honorable debts to the soldiers paid in this way, to have the new States pay their share of the nineteen-twentieths of it and to pay the other twentieth wholly. Whether it is as fair as it is thrifty, I must be allowed to doubt.

My remarks are very desultory, and must be so, as I speak hurriedly and wish to be as brief as possible. I must recur for a few moments to what has been said about the benefits conferred upon the new States by the land grants, those for railroads especially. They have been benefited unquestionably, and the country has been benefited as well as they. Before these grants were made to Iowa we had a population of less than two hundred thousand people. That was in 1856. We have to-day, I apprehend, a population of a million and a half. The building of railroads has done much to bring that population to us; but has the country derived no corresponding benefit from it? The Senator from New York spoke with a good deal of feeling upon this subject, and was replied to very well by the Senator from Florida. What would New York be to-day if it were not for the Northwestern States? She stands to-day at the great gateway of our commerce, and she tolls all that passes through her, I am afraid with both hands sometimes. Because she has had that opportunity, because from the great Northwest there has been this immense outflow and inflow to supply her wants, she has grown rich, and like many another who has grown rich, she mistakes the cause of her wealth; she thinks she has created it herself.

The building up of the western country has done more for the welfare of the nation than perhaps any other policy of our Government since it has had a policy. The fact that those States are settled States to-day instead of being largely a wilderness, and their productions of grain and provisions that we send abroad, with the cotton and tobacco raised in the Southern States, have enabled this Government to do what otherwise it could not have done. They have furnished hundreds of millions of dollars to swell the balance of trade and make it in our favor instead of against us. They have made resumption possible; they have made the payment of our national debt possible. That is what they have done; and having done that, I do not think the fact that those States have grown under this wise and liberal policy of our Government should be thrown in our teeth when we stand here to-day asking for nothing but naked and simple justice for the people from whom we come.

I understood the Senator from Vermont the other day to argue, and to read authority to show, that it must not only be a sale, but a sale for money, to entitle the States to any share of the proceeds. Let me illustrate how that would work, Mr. President. We have in our State, as in most of the new States, gentlemen who follow the business of land agents; that is, they undertake to find for men who wish to buy land a person who wishes to sell, and for persons who wish to sell land they undertake to find purchasers, receiving a compensation for their services. When a farmer desires to sell his farm he goes to one of these agents. He ordinarily makes a contract providing that the agent shall get a certain percentage of the proceeds of the sale, in case a sale shall be effected. The agent advertises the land largely, giving a description of it, and seeks to find a purchaser. Some man sees one of these advertisements, reads the description given of the land, and thinks it would suit him for a farm; and a correspondence commences between him and the agent. The result is that after a while the proposed purchaser and the person wishing to sell come together, and they make an agreement. Let me suppose that the value of the farm held by the seller was $5,000. The person proposing to buy agrees to pay that sum, but the man selling desires to go West, into Colorado, and engage in the cattle business, and instead of taking his $5,000 in money he takes two hundred yearlings at $20 apiece, making $4,000, and ten horses at $100 each, the whole making $5,000. He has other property, the sale of which will make money enough to take him to Colorado, and he has this stock to start him in the cattle business. The trade is consummated, the deed is made, the farm is turned over, the cattle and horses are turned over, and the man is about to start West with his outfit, when the agent comes to him and says, "Look here, you have not settled with me yet for the sale of that land." The man pulls out his written contract with the agent and finds that it reads that the agent, in case a sale should be effected, is to get 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sale; and, says he, "I have seen the Senator from Vermont, who is one of the ablest lawyers in this country, and he tells me that this was a mere barter, a mere exchange; that it was no sale, because it was not done for money, and I am not compelled to pay you a cent." That may be good law, but I doubt it. If the man who sold his farm could defeat the honest claim of the agent upon that ground, he might among us be held to be a very sharp man, but I am strongly inclined to think that it would be held that he was slightly dishonest. If the Government of the United States received value, or what she chose to consider as value, for these lands, she herself being the judge whether that which she received was value or not, it does not lie in her mouth to say that it was not a sale, and that because it was not a sale she will not pay to these States what she agreed to pay when she did sell.

I do not know, Mr. President, that I can make any more plain than I have tried to do my idea in regard to this matter. I have looked upon it as the true construction of a fair, square contract between parties who meant to deal fairly and squarely with each other. I have not looked upon it as a contract between persons who were seeking to find some quibble by which either one or the other might evade the performance of that which it was intended by both should be done. Hoping and believing as I do that the Congress of the United States will look at it in that light, I shall relieve the Senate from any further remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the indefinite postponement of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to say a few words, if it is entirely agreeable to my friend from Iowa.

Mr. FERRY. Does the Senator desire to go on now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not care; I have something to say.

Mr. FERRY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not desire to oppose the motion for an executive session, but I wish to call the attention of the Senate again to the fact that the measure now before it ought to be disposed of to-morrow. With the understanding that it shall be disposed of to-morrow I shall not oppose the motion.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Perhaps general consent will be given to an agreement to take the vote to-morrow.

Mr. McDONALD. I suggest, if the bill goes over now, under the motion to go into executive session, that it go over with the understanding that it is to be disposed of to-morrow.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to have any understanding, because I have found that in cases where we have had such an understanding it turned out to be inconvenient. I have not the slightest disposition to delay a vote on this question, and do not expect myself to occupy more than half an hour or three-quarters of an hour, in replying, chiefly in self-defense, because I have pretty much made up my mind that it is the Senator from Vermont and not this bill that is at present under the teeth of the harrow, (to use the expression of the Senator from Iowa,) of that great and growing State. But I object to understandings upon the fundamental ground that they turn out to be erroneous. If the Senate wants to sit the bill out, it can, and, as far as I am concerned, I beg to say to my friend from Indiana that I am, and shall be quite ready to do so. I am willing to go on for an hour longer to-day if the Senator insists upon it.

Mr. McDONALD. I do not insist upon the Senator going on to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly agree with the Senator from Indiana that this matter should not be delayed, and it shall be disposed of as far as I can help to dispose of it; but my only objection to an understanding is that I have found by experience that it is not a good practice.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to withdraw an objection which I made to the present consideration of a joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. BURNSIDE] this morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERRY] that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNSIDE. While the galleries are being cleared, as the Senator from Delaware has withdrawn his objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to make the 23d of February, 1880, a legal holiday in the District of Columbia, I ask unanimous consent to have it considered now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. BOOTH. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One objection carries the joint resolution over. The Chair will take this opportunity to present a bill from the House of Representatives for reference.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and fifty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at six o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 18, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

SOLDIERS' REUNION, CENTRAL CITY, NEBRASKA.

Mr. VALENTINE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 218) granting the use of artillery, tents, &c., at the soldiers' reunion to be held at Central City, Nebraska; which was read a first and second time.

The joint resolution, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of War to send from some convenient Government arsenal, to be used at the soldiers' reunion at Central City, Nebraska, to be held on September 18, 1880, four pieces of artillery and such tents, muskets, and blank cartridges as can be conveniently spared, said cannon, tents, muskets, &c., to be returned after the holding of said reunion meeting in as like good condition as when received, provided that all transportation of said articles to and from the place of the reunion and the arsenal shall be without expense to the Government.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VALENTINE moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLIVER VAN BILLIARD.

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4571) granting a pension to Oliver Van Billiard, of Anthony, Hunterdon County, New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

VERIFICATION OF NATIONAL-BANK RETURNS.

Mr. PRICE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4572) defining the verification of returns of national banks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

REPAIRS POST-OFFICE BUILDING, LOUISVILLE, KENTUCKY.

Mr. WILLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4573) making appropriations for the alteration and repairs of the post-office and custom-house at Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CHAMBERS & BROWN.

Mr. WILLIS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4574) for the relief of Chambers & Brown, Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

FORT RANDALL MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. BENNETT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4575) abolishing all that portion of the military reservation of Fort Randall, Territory of Dakota, lying east and north of the Missouri River; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURTS, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

On motion of Mr. NEW, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was discharged from the further consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 2384) amendatory of and supplementary to "An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Fort Wayne, Indiana," approved June 18, 1878; and the same was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PUBLIC LANDS, WYOMING TERRITORY.

Mr. DOWNEY, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming to the Congress of the United States, praying suitable legislation in reference to public lands in Wyoming Territory, so as to enable the several water-courses to be made available for agriculture; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial and joint resolution are as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming, respectfully represent that the public lands in Wyoming are largely of a class unsuited to the successful prosecution of agricultural pursuits, but are peculiarly adapted to all pastoral purposes. In consequence of this fact large portions of the Territory have already been occupied by persons engaged in stock-raising in its various branches, in which business a considerable amount of capital has been invested, yielding the most ample returns upon the investments. The very profitable nature of the stock-raising business is constantly adding new accessions of capital to that industry, so that in a brief period the entire Territory will be occupied by those engaged in that pursuit.

Your memorialists would further respectfully represent that the laws of the United States in relation to the disposition of the public lands are wholly unsuited to the requirements of a country such as this, and need such reasonable modification and amendments as will adapt them to the circumstances which are peculiar to our location and situation.

The arid character of the soil and climate in this region of country render it indispensably necessary that all occupants of the public lands should have legal right of free access and approach to the water-courses of the country.

The uplands and "divides," situated at a distance from the streams, are covered with a luxuriant growth of rich and nutritious grasses, but are comparatively worthless for any of the purposes of use and occupation unless the occupants can obtain some legal right to pass over adjacent lands to the water-courses. The lands along the streams are being rapidly occupied and inclosed under present laws, whereby all access thereto is prevented. All this results in giving to those who have been fortunate to obtain prior rights to the lands along the streams a monopoly of the use of the uplands and "divides," without the necessity of purchasing the same, and prevents that complete occupation of the country which is essential to its best and most successful development. The present state of affairs retards the growth of the Territory by effectually excluding settlement from the larger part of the public domain, and renders it impossible for the United States to make any disposition of the greater part of its lands in this Territory. The evil here adverted to grows in magnitude in proportion as the lands adjacent to the water-courses are occupied and inclosed under the present land policy of the Government; and such occupancy and inclosure are daily becoming more extensive, so that it is but a question of very short time, if a prompt remedy be not afforded by Congress, when the whole Territory will be in the virtual possession and use of those few persons who have title to the small fractions of the lands along the streams.

Your memorialists believe that Congress, in its control over the public domain and the disposition thereof, has ample power to provide a remedy for the grievance which thus grows under the operation of existing laws, and that this power ought now to be exercised before vested rights have accrued.

We believe that the water-courses of the country ought to be controlled by proper legislation; that they can be made available for the common and equal benefit, so far as possible, of all persons who may choose to occupy and improve any part of the public domain; and that legislation which would secure such benefit to all alike would be to the mutual advantage of the United States and of the Territory of Wyoming, that such legislation would result in a large increase of our population and in the highest development of the resources and capacities of this region of country at an early day.

Your memorialists therefore most respectfully and humbly pray your honorable bodies that the subject herein presented may receive your early and respectful consideration and attention, and that such legislation as is herein suggested may be adopted at an early day; and as in duty bound, your memorialists will ever pray.

Be it resolved by the council of the Legislative Assembly of Wyoming Territory, (the house of representatives concurring,) That the accompanying joint memorial be forwarded to Hon. S. W. DOWNEY, our Delegate in Congress, and that he be requested to cause the same to be presented to the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States for their consideration and action.

H. L. MYRICK,
Speaker of the House.
H. GARBANATI,
President of the Council.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, TERRITORY OF WYOMING.

I, A. Worth Spates, hereby certify that accompanying memorial (No. 14) is a true copy of original on file in this office.

In witness whereof I hereunto affix my hand and the great seal of Wyoming this 12th day of February, 1880.

A. WORTH SPATES,
Secretary of Territory.

TERRITORIAL SUPREME COURTS.

Mr. DOWNEY also, by unanimous consent, presented memorial and joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming to the Congress of the United States in reference to the courts of the Territories; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial and joint resolution are as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming, would most respectfully call the attention of Congress to the present imperfect system of determining cases on appeal from the district court of the Territory. Our supreme courts are composed of the three district judges of the Territory; and in the event of an appeal the judge from whose decision the appeal is taken is permitted and required to sit as a member of the appellate court on the same case. Should the other two judges disagree the decision rendered below will be affirmed unless the judge from whom the appeal was taken should overrule his own decision, which seldom occurs, thus practically depriving the appellant from a fair and impartial hearing in the supreme court.

Your memorialists would therefore most respectfully pray of your honorable body to provide for the organization of an appellate court upon some different basis, and would most respectfully suggest that our supreme court might be composed of United States circuit judges, having jurisdiction of all cases appealed from the district courts of all the Territories, to hold their sessions at some central locality to be designated by Congress or the chief-justices of the various Territories, or all the justices of the Territories might compose the supreme court, or Congress might devise some better method than any herein suggested to obviate the difficulty herein mentioned, and as in duty bound your memorialists will ever pray.

Resolved by the council and house of representatives of the Territory of Wyoming, That an authenticated copy of this memorial be forwarded to Hon. STEPHEN W. DOWNEY, Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Wyoming, who is hereby respectfully requested to lay the same before the honorable Senate and House of Representatives.

H. GARBANATI,
President of Council.
H. L. MYRICK,
Speaker of the House.

SECRETARY'S OFFICE, TERRITORY OF WYOMING,
Cheyenne, February 12, 1880.

I, A. Worth Spates, hereby certify this to be a correct copy of the original, which is on file in this office.

In witness whereof I hereunto affix my hand and the great seal of Wyoming this 12th day of February, 1880.

[SEAL.]

A. WORTH SPATES,
Secretary of Territory.

DEFICIENCY IN PAY OF MEMBERS OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

Mr. DOWNEY also, by unanimous consent, presented memorial and joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of Wyoming Territory to the Congress of the United States, praying that a deficiency of $3,360 due to members of said Legislative Assembly be appropriated; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SETTLERS IN VALLEY OF LITTLE WIND RIVER.

Mr. DOWNEY also, by unanimous consent, presented joint resolution and memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Wyoming, praying Congress to provide for a board of arbitration to take the evidence in reference to the claims of certain settlers in the valley of the Little Wind River, in said Territory; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL PAXTON.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4576) for the relief of Samuel Paxton, of Warren County, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Claims.

ALFRED H. BROOKS.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH also, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4577) for the relief of Alfred H. Brooks, of the State of New Jersey; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CATHERINE GREYBIG.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH also, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4578) granting a pension to Catherine Greybig; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CAPTAIN A. C. GIRARD AND MAJOR DAVID H. BROTHERTON.

Mr. MAGINNIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4579) for the relief of Captain A. C. Girard, assistant surgeon, and Major David H. Brotherton, United States Army; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

JOHN P. MOORE.

Mr. DUNN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4580) for the relief of John P. Moore; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

BULLION CLUB OF NEW YORK.

Mr. WARNER, from the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, reported adversely on the petition of the Bullion Club of New York praying to have the circulation of notes of a smaller denomination than $20 prohibited; and it was ordered to be inserted in the RECORD and printed, and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

The petition is as follows:

To the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States:

Your petitioners, the Bullion Club, an association representing so vital an industrial interest of the country as its production of the money metals, would respectfully but urgently represent to your honorable body that under the present monetary system there is not, and cannot be, a general practical use of specie money in the country such as was contemplated by the framers of the Constitution of the United States. Under our present system, wholly reversing the practice of such commercial nations as Great Britain, France, and Germany, who are not producers of the money metals, we, who are the chief producers of gold and silver in the world, virtually coin all the gold we produce, together with that which we import, into pieces of the denomination of $20, wholly unsuited for the currency purposes of the people, and forcing the vast retail transactions of our country to be carried on necessarily in paper money (in part not legal tender, the national-bank notes, and the other part of disputed legal-tendership) of the denomination of ones, twos, fives, and ten-dollar bills. Therefore, your petitioners would respectfully urge upon your honorable body the necessity for restricting from further circulation all emissions of paper money below the denomination of $20, with such a coinage of gold and silver hereafter at the several mints of the United States that in lieu of the withdrawn five and ten dollar bills a gold coinage of these denominations, with quarter eagles, may get into circulation and silver money take the place recognized for it in the Constitution. The time, as your petitioners believe, is propitious for wise legislation on this subject. In addition to the large amount of gold and silver in the country on the 1st of January last, when resumption took place, we have since produced nearly $80,000,000 of gold and silver, and have imported from Europe about the same amount. This sum of bullion has so far not been utilized in our currency, but lies, under our system, necessarily inert in the Treasury vaults, in banks, and in private safe-deposit companies. We do not wish to express any opinion touching the desirability of expanding or contracting the paper currency of the country, nor have we any issue to make as to the wisdom or policy of retaining the legal-tender power of the so-called greenbacks, but if it is possible to induce the national banks to hold their reserves in coin instead of in Treasury notes, and in addition to withdraw the small bills, we hope that Congress, in its wisdom, will so legislate, and thus give our people an opportunity to have a specie currency, for which the mines of the country are annually supplying an abundance of the money metals.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

D. G. CROLY, Secretary.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, to which was referred the petition of the Bullion Club of New York, respectfully reports, as follows:

The Bullion Club represents that "under the present monetary system there is not and cannot be a general, practical use of specie money in the country," and asks to have the issue of paper money below the denominations of $20 prohibited.

The committee concedes that when the channels of circulation in any country are filled by a volume of paper large enough to sustain, of itself, prices at the level of prices in other countries, metallic money will not go into circulation, but will be drained to countries where it is demanded for currency. Hence under a system like ours which permits the issue of paper money of all denominations by banks, with no other restrictions on the amount issued but such as security of final payment in Government legal-tender paper may impose, metallic money cannot be expected permanently to be held in circulation. For it is believed to be a primary law of currency that a larger volume of paper money cannot be kept in any country, convertible into coin, or even permanently at par with metallic money, than that country would have as its distributive share of the world's supply of the metals, if it had no paper. It is equally true that when the paper money of a country constitutes a volume as large as that country would naturally have of coin if there were no paper, coin will cease to circulate.

If denominations of paper money below $20 were prohibited in the United States, coin would undoubtedly flow into channels now filled with the smaller denominations of paper.

But other questions arise when the proposition comes up to abolish paper money of small denominations.

The greater convenience of paper money over coin is one of the principal reasons for the use of paper at all, and it will hardly be claimed that there is no convenience in paper of denominations below $20. That there is often great convenience in having one and two dollar notes, to say nothing of fives and tens, can hardly be questioned.

Even fractional paper currency in small quantity has been found very convenient.

There are three ways by which paper currency can be regulated so as both to maintain its equivalency with metallic money and permit at the same time the concurrent circulation of coin, and consequently its permanent retention in the country:

First. By limiting the issue of denominations of paper money, as proposed in the petition, to $20 and over. In this case coin, if unrestricted, will come in to take the place of the smaller paper currency.

Second. By a due limitation of the total volume of paper, leaving the denominations to be determined by the conveniences of trade.

Suppose, for instance, that in the course of its international trade a country would possess, at a given time, as its proportion of the world's money supply, say $800,000,000. Then if the total quantity of paper be strictly limited within that volume, or say to five, six, or seven hundred millions, coin would flow into the various channels as needed to supplement the paper circulation. In that case paper and coin together would circulate and vary as a purely metallic currency would vary; that is, with the course of the exchanges or the tide of international trade. The metals in that case, in response to trade oscillations, would flow to or from a country in settlement of balances, the same as if the whole internal circulation were coin.

Third. By the establishment of a purely metallic currency with true paper representatives, dollar for dollar, which might then be of all denominations which convenience required; that is, let gold and silver coin and gold and silver bullion be made the foundation of as much paper and of such denominations as might be demanded. Of such paper, which being the actual representative of and title to the metals, there could never be inflation; nor could there be violent contraction if there were no restrictions, as there should never be, placed upon the use of the metals.

Of these methods of dealing with the currency to make way for the use of the metals, in the opinion of the committee, a combination of the second and third methods, with, perhaps, some limitation on the quantity of smaller denominations, would best subserve the ends of a currency; that is, restrict absolutely the volume of paper not representing the metals to some amount as far within the limits of such volume of metallic money as would probably exist if there were no paper as circumstances would justify, leaving additions to be made by gold and silver coin, or certificates representing the metals, to any extent that our trade and commerce may call for. Of course it is essential to this as to any other automatic system that the metals shall be left absolutely to self-regulation and that the coinage and the deposit of bullion should be open and free to all.

Without due restriction and regulation of the volume of paper the committee deems it idle to expect to secure a permanent metallic currency or to see any considerable part of our circulation become even temporarily metallic.

The promise to pay on demand, however secure the promise ultimately may be made by the deposit of bonds, is not such a regulation of volume and consequently of the value of a currency as is necessary to maintain sure convertibility or even its permanent equivalency with the metals. This, it is believed, is not only the teachings of science, but has been confirmed over and over by the experience of the world.

The committee, therefore, while concurring in the main purpose of your petitioners, recommends, however, instead of prohibiting denominations of paper below $20, that the volume of paper money, which is now nearly $700,000,000, be limited at least to its present volume by prohibiting any additional issues of paper founded in credit only; and it further recommends that the metals alone shall hereafter be relied upon for needed increase in the volume, with provision for bullion certificates, with automatic regulations through free coinage and deposit of the metals.

Your committee therefore recommends that the petition be laid on the table.

M. M. HERR.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee of Accounts, reported back amendments of the Senate to joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr, with the recommendation that they be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

After line 5 insert "That the following sum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for salaries of officers of the Senate, namely

"For salaries of three messengers, under Senate resolution of December 11, 1879, for the fiscal year 1880, $2,355.65."

Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution for the relief of M. M. Herr, and to pay three messengers of the Senate."

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAMUEL ALADICE.

Mr. DE LA MATYR, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4581) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Aladice; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARY E. DANE.

Mr. DE LA MATYR also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4582) granting a pension to Mary E. Dane; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

CENTENNIAL COMMISSION.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Printing, reported back adversely the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) authorizing the printing of additional copies of the reports of the centennial commission; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States of America:

Your committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 109) providing for the publication of an edition of forty thousand additional copies of the reports of the centennial commission, having had the same under consideration, beg leave respectfully to make the following report:

At the last session of Congress this committee made a report to your honorable body, in pursuance of which a resolution was passed authorizing an edition of five thousand copies of the work now under consideration. This was represented at the time to be a number sufficient to supply all legitimate demands. The resolution proposed at present would entail an expense upon the Government of $142,843.31. In view of the vast expense and the fact that public libraries and other repositories of public documents are already supplied, your committee think the publication should not be made. To say that there is a demand for the work among certain classes, can have no particular weight, in that a gratis distribution of any well-bound set of books, no matter what their contents may be, will always find hosts of people anxious to avail themselves of the opportunity to fill the empty shelves of their libraries at the public expense.

Your committee therefore report back the resolution adversely, and move that the same be laid upon the table; and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof.

SALLIE KANSAS SMELZER.

Mr. FORNEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4583) granting a pension to Sallie Kansas Smelzer, senior child of Adam C. Smelzer, late captain of independent scouts; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

LEO KARPELES.

Mr. ROBINSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4584) for the relief of Leo Karpeles; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IMMEDIATE TRANSPORTATION OF DUTIABLE GOODS.

Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, by unanimous consent, presented the petition of the merchants and importers of the city of Chicago, for the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 870) for immediate transportation of dutiable goods; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and the body of the petition ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

The body of the petition is as follows:

A petition to the House of Representatives and the Senate of the United States.

We, the undersigned importers and merchants of the city of Chicago, do hereby petition your honorable bodies to give speedy consideration to the bills introduced by Hon. WILLIAM ALDRICH and Hon. JOHN A. LOGAN, for the amendment of the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise.

The said bills are alike, and are as follows:

FORTY-SIXTH CONGRESS, First session. } H. R. No. 870.

A bill to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That when any merchandise imported at the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Portland, (in Maine,) Chicago, Port Huron, Detroit, New Orleans, Cleveland, Toledo, and San Francisco shall appear, by the manifest of the importing vessel, to be consigned to and destined for either of the ports specified in the sixth section of this act, the collector at the port of arrival shall take said merchandise into his custody and immediately forward the same to such port of destination.

SEC. 2. The collector at the port of first arrival shall retain in his office a permanent record of such merchandise so to be forwarded to the port of destination. Such merchandise shall not be subject to appraisement and liquidation of duties at the port of first arrival, but shall undergo such examination as the Secretary of the Treasury shall deem necessary to verify the manifest; and the same examination and appraisement thereof shall be required and had at the port of destination as would have been required at the port of first arrival if such merchandise had been entered for consumption or warehouse at such port.

SEC. 3. Such merchandise shall be delivered to and transported by common carriers, to be designated for this purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to and by none others; and such carriers shall be responsible to the United States as common carriers for the safe delivery of such merchandise to the collector at the port of its destination; and before any such carriers shall be permitted to receive and transport any such merchandise, they shall become bound to the United States in bonds of such form and amount, and with such conditions, not inconsistent with law, and such security as the Secretary of the Treasury shall require.

SEC. 4. Merchandise transported under the provisions of this act shall be conveyed in cars, vessels, or vehicles securely fastened with locks or seals, under the exclusive control of the officers of the customs; and inspectors shall be stationed at proper points along the designated routes, or upon any car, vessel, vehicle, or train, at the discretion of the Secretary, and at the expense of the companies respectively. Such merchandise shall not be unladen or transshipped between the ports of first arrival and final destination, unless authorized by the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury in cases which may arise from a difference in the gauge of railroads, or from accidents, or from legal intervention, or from low water, ice, or other unavoidable obstruction to navigation; and in no case shall there be permitted any breaking of the original packages of such merchandise.

SEC. 5. Merchandise so destined for immediate transportation shall be transferred, under proper supervision, directly from the importing vessel to the car, vessel, or vehicle in which the same is to be transported to its final destination.

SEC. 6. The privilege of immediate transportation shall extend to the ports of New York and Buffalo, in New York; Boston, in Massachusetts; Providence, in Rhode Island; Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania; Baltimore, in Maryland; Norfolk, in Virginia; Charleston, in South Carolina; Savannah, in Georgia; New Orleans, in Louisiana; Portland, in Maine; Chicago, in Illinois; Detroit, in Michigan; Saint Louis, in Missouri; Saint Paul, in Minnesota; Cincinnati, Cleveland, and Toledo, in Ohio; Milwaukee, in Wisconsin; Louisville, in Kentucky; San Francisco, in California; Portland, in Oregon; Memphis, in Tennessee; and Mobile, in Alabama; Port Huron, in Michigan; and Evansville, in Indiana.

SEC. 7. That sections 2990, 2991, 2992, 2993, 2994, 2995, 2996, and 2997 be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Your petitioners request this because they are anxious to enjoy that freedom in the transaction of their foreign trade which they believe to be their constitutional right. Your petitioners represent that onerous bonds and restrictions are at present laid upon their foreign trade which prevent its development to such an extent that only a very small portion of the foreign goods used and sold by us are imported into the port of Chicago.

Your petitioners believe that the transaction of business under the provisions of the bills hereinbefore referred to would be attended with perfect safety to the revenue, nay further that it would afford additional guarantee for the proper collection of duties, as your petitioners believe that the growth of the interior ports if they were allowed equal privileges with the seaboard ports would be so great that the present comparative concentration of customs business would be broken up, and standards of comparison instituted which would render fraud impracticable, and hence assure the revenue sounder and safer protection than it now has.

DUTY ON BARLEY MALT.

Mr. MORTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4585) fixing the rate of duty on barley malt at twenty-five cents per bushel; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ELIZABETH MARIA DOULL.

Mr. MORTON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4586) granting a pension to Elizabeth Maria Doull; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

MARGARET T. RYAN.

Mr. O'REILLY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4587) for the relief of Margaret T. Ryan, late widow of George F. Cole; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is requested by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] to ask that the privileges of the floor be allowed to Judge John J. Jacksen and Hon. Robert Simpson, of West Virginia.

There was no objection.

RAILROAD FROM MISSOURI RIVER TO PACIFIC OCEAN.

Mr. MCLANE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4588) to alter and amend an act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

VOTE ON DISTRICT LOTTERY BILL.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. On pages 30 and 31 of this morning's RECORD I am recorded as not voting on the call of the yeas and nays on the District lottery bill. I wish to state that I was absent by leave of the House, and was paired with my colleague, Mr. WRIGHT. That fact was inadvertently not announced.

VESSELS OF UNITED STATES.

Mr. CRAPO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4589) to provide for vessels of the United States hailing from places where they are owned or built; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF UNITED STATES PROPERTY IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL, by unanimous consent, (and by request,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4590) to provide for the sale of certain property owned by the United States in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

SHEER-BOOMS AT STRAIGHT SLOUGH.

Mr. DUNNELL introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4591) to authorize the Mississippi River Logging Company to construct and operate sheer-booms at or near Straight Slough; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING IN DETROIT.

Mr. COOK. I rise to make a privileged report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. I am instructed by that committee to report back the resolution I send to the desk, which was referred to the committee on the motion of Mr. NEWBERRY, of Michigan, and to ask its adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform this House—

1. As to the size of the lot of land in the city of Detroit and State of Michigan on which the building known as the custom-house and post-office is located.

2. The size of the building now erected thereon and the date of its erection and cost of the same, together with the number, situation, and size of the rooms occupied respectively by the Post-Office, the Treasury Department, the Department of Justice, and any and all other officers in said building.

3. The amount of available room on said lot for the erection of an addition to said building, and its availability for use as to light and convenience after erection, and his opinion as to the propriety and economy of the erection of said addition, in view of the want of room for the use of the present occupants of said building, and the numerous other rooms and buildings in the city of Detroit now rented for the use of the United States.

4. The number of rented rooms and buildings and amount of rent paid for the same by the Treasury and other Departments of the Government in said city.

5. The comparative amount of business done in the said building by the several Government officers therein for the year after said building was first occupied and the year 1878 or 1879.

The resolution was adopted.

HON. J. H. ACKLEN.

Mr. COX. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to present their unanimous report in the matter of Hon. Mr. ACKLEN, and to ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report and testimony be printed.

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask that the report be read. I also ask of the gentleman from New York the privilege to revise the statements made, before the testimony is printed; which request I made of the committee.

Mr. COX. I will submit the request to the committee. I am not now authorized as the organ of the committee to agree to it.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs on the resolution adopted January 30, 1880, on motion of Hon. J. H. ACKLEN.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, under instruction of the House, by the resolution adopted on motion of Mr. ACKLEN, January 30, 1880, unanimously submit the following report.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and they are hereby, requested to examine into the truth or falsity of the statement read by Mr. ACKLEN from the Detroit Post and Tribune and report back to the House."

The following extract from the RECORD of January 31 contains the proceedings in the House in connection with the adoption of the above resolution:

"PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

"Mr. ACKLEN. I rise to a question of privilege.

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

"Mr. ACKLEN. I dislike to occupy the valuable time of this House in a matter of personal interest, but my attention has been called to an article in the New York Herald and also in the Detroit Post and Tribune——

"The SPEAKER. Do those articles affect the gentleman in his representative capacity?

"Mr. ACKLEN. They do.

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

"Mr. ACKLEN. They are so grossly untrue and such a vile attack upon me, not only as a gentleman but as a Representative, that a proper sense of justice to my constituents as well as to myself forces me to speak that my silence may not be, misconstrued. I quote the following from the Detroit Post and Tribune of January 26:

"'On the 13th of January, taking advantage of a moment when no other member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was present, ACKLEN rose in the House and declared, as appears in the official report of the proceedings of Congress:

"'"Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the claims of certain citizens against the government of Nicaragua be referred to the Committee of the Whole and ordered to be printed.

"'"There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly."'

"'The alleged report thus handed in by ACKLEN was received, duly printed, and laid upon the desks of members. Some days afterward the members of the Committee on Foreign Relations were astonished at seeing these proceedings in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. The chairman asked ACKLEN what it meant and received an unsatisfactory reply. Accordingly he called the committee together and summoned ACKLEN before them, when it appeared that neither the committee nor the chairman had ever made, nor authorized, nor read the report which ACKLEN had palmed off on the House as the report of the committee; and, further, the committee would not agree to any such report. ACKLEN was then informed that he must withdraw that report and apologize to the House, or vigorous proceedings would be instituted to expel him in disgrace.'

"The article then proceeds to say that I apologized to the House and withdrew the report, but that this was done 'in a quiet way, and at such a moment as to attract the least attention. But those who understood it explained to the other members, and a hot feeling of indignation has been growing ever since.'

"I need hardly say, Mr. Speaker, that this is perhaps one of the most willful and malicious perversions of fact on record.

"On Monday, January 19, my colleague, Mr. KING, who had lately returned from Louisiana, called my attention to the article in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, quoted in the extract which I have read, and also to a report, No. 86, second session Forty-sixth Congress, which bore his name. I informed him at once that there was evidently a mistake, as I had never made any such request of the House nor offered any such report as coming from his committee; that I had requested to have a report made by me in the Forty-fifth Congress, with manuscript attached, (Report No. 96, Forty-fifth Congress, second session,) printed, as it referred to a matter already on the public Calendar, and that I would gladly ask that the report bearing his name be withdrawn and make a statement to relieve him from any embarrassment in the case. Now, what was it I said on January 13? On this point I submit the following letter from the chief reporter of this House:

"'HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
"'Washington, D. C., January 30, 1880.

"'DEAR SIR: In accordance with your request, the reporter on duty at the time you made your statement to the House, January 13, has examined his notes, and the following is an exact transcript of them:

"'"Mr. ACKLEN. I ask that a report be printed in a couple of cases already on the public Calendar.

"'"So ordered."'

"'Very respectfully, yours,
"'J. J. MCELHONE.

"'Hon. J. H. ACKLEN.'"

"How was it, then, that my old report of the Forty-fifth Congress, with the manuscript attached, which I requested to be printed to accompany a matter already on the public Calendar, came to be printed as Mr. KING'S report? Why, simply in this way—but first I desire to here submit the following letter from the journal clerk of the House:

"'WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1880.

"'DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry as to my recollection of the circumstances attending your request on January 13, to have a report printed, I can merely say that I remember the confusion in the House was so great at that time that I could not understand at the desk what it was you desired, and left it and came up the aisle near your desk to ascertain. I was much hurried, and the confusion was very great, but I recollect your stating something about a matter on the public Calendar, though I could not hear very distinctly. I judged that you wanted to make a report to go on the Calendar. Mr. KING'S name was in pencil-mark on the outside of the wrapper, and this naturally led me to suppose that the request was to print a paper in connection with some case on the public Calendar, or else to reprint your report of the previous Congress, which on examination of the papers I found to be incorporated therein.

"'Very respectfully, yours,
"'HENRY H. SMITH,
"'Journal Clerk.

"'Hon. J. H. ACKLEN.'

"Now, in the Forty-fifth Congress I was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs and had referred to me the petitions of Woolsey Teller and Eliza Livingston. On these I made a report, (No. 96, Forty-fifth Congress, third session,) which simply recommended the passage of the following resolution:

"'Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to take such steps as in his opinion may not be incompatible with the public interests to secure an early settlement and adjustment of the claims of Woolsey Teller and Eliza Livingston, citizens of the United States, and other citizens thereof, against the government of Nicaragua, by an international arbitration or otherwise.'

"This report, however, contains all the facts and papers, and numbers ten printed pages.

"During the latter part of the Forty-fifth Congress I was so seriously unwell that I did not attend the sessions of the House, and my report was therefore not acted upon. The Senate in the mean time, acting upon the suggestions of the Secretary of State, appointed Hons. HAMLIN, CONKLING, KIRKWOOD, EATON, and MORGAN a committee on the part of the Senate to examine the papers on file in the Department of State in all claims of our citizens against the government of Nicaragua.

"Following then in the footsteps of the Senate, on Wednesday, April 23, 1879, in the morning hour, after the call of committees for reports, (see page 742, RECORD, first session Forty-sixth Congress,) I introduced in substance, on the part of the House, the same resolution which had passed the Senate. Finding that my resolution was likely to stick in the morning hour without action, as this stage in our legislative proceedings is seldom reached, I, on May 5, 1879, sent a copy of this resolution and accompanying papers to the Committee on Foreign Affairs through the petition-box. (See page 1069, RECORD, first session Forty-sixth Congress.) By doing this I had two chances of reaching it for action: one in the morning hour; the other when the committee might report it to the House. The Committee on Foreign Affairs referred the matter to Mr. KING, and I gave him my old report, together with a manuscript statement of the action of the Senate. On June 30, just before the adjournment of the extra session, this resolution, which was pending in the morning hour, was by unanimous consent (see pages 2440 and 2441, RECORD, first session Forty-sixth Congress) placed on the public Calendar, where it now stands. (See Calendar of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.) It here appears as follows:

"'June 30—Mr. ACKLEN:

"'Resolved, That a select committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, which committee shall have power to sit during the recess, to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua for indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which claims have heretofore been filed in the Department of State, and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and said committee shall ascertain and determine what amounts and to what persons the government of Nicaragua is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session; and said committee shall give such public notice as it may deem necessary of the times and places when and where it will sit to hear said claims and testimony in support of the same, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. It shall also obtain and use all proofs relative thereto on file in the Department of State and such other evidence as any party in interest may produce and offer that it may deem pertinent thereto. It shall have power to employ a clerk and a stenographer; and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the vouchers of the chairman of said committee.'

"Having it now on the public Calendar, where it might be reached any day, I naturally lost all interest in the same matter before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I therefore asked my colleague, Mr. KING, to return me the report and manuscript which I had given him, because it can be readily seen I might have use for them any day. Finding that my old report had been pretty well exhausted—it was my first congressional report and I scattered them extensively—I concluded to have it reprinted together with the manuscript statement of the Senate's action. This action is of frequent occurrence in both Houses, so I therefore made the request on January 13, 1880, as stated in the letter of the chief reporter of the House, and not as it appears in the RECORD.

"Thus, Mr. Speaker, through an error for which I am in no wise responsible or to blame, have I been made the object of bitter, unjust, and scurrilous newspaper abuse. These articles have been spread the length and breadth of the land, and therefore, after consulting with members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, among whom I am proud to number personal friends, I offer the following, ask its passage and reference to that committee, that my exoneration may be as full as the attack has been foul:

"'Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be, and they are hereby, requested to examine into the truth or falsity of the statement read by Mr. ACKLEN from the Detroit Post and Tribune, and report back to this House.'

"Mr. WILSON. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I desire to make one remark. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] has never been summoned before the committee by its order. What may have occurred between him and the chairman of the committee I do not know. The first intimation the Committee on Foreign Affairs had of this subject, so far as I know, was that a member of the committee, General KING, of Louisiana, communicated to the committee the fact that a report had been made by Mr. ACKLEN. General KING held that this report had done him injustice; that it placed the Committee on Foreign Affairs in a very improper light before the House, and that some explanation was necessary. Thereupon General KING produced a statement which he said Mr. ACKLEN would make upon the floor of the House, if acceptable to the committee, and that if acceptable to the committee it would be acceptable to him. The statement was read by Mr. KING, and subsequently communicated by Mr. ACKLEN to the House.

"I think it proper to say this much in justice to the gentleman who has just taken his seat, and also in justice to General KING, my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who is not now on the floor.

"Mr. ACKLEN. There can be no possible objection to the resolution.

"Mr. GARFIELD. Reserving my right to object, I ask that it be again read.

"The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana has risen to a question of privilege in reference to a matter which the Chair thinks does affect him in his representative capacity.

"Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman may have a right to raise the question of privilege; but the question whether the House will adopt the resolution he submits is another thing. I would like to hear the resolution.

"The SPEAKER. The resolution will be again read.

"The Clerk again read the resolution.

"Mr. GARFIELD. If the Committee on Foreign Affairs do not object to this I do not.

"The resolution was adopted.

"Mr. ACKLEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

"The latter motion was agreed to."

It will be observed that while Mr. ACKLEN in his remarks refers to an article in the New York Herald, as well as to the one quoted from the Detroit Post and Tribune, the resolution confines the committee to an inquiry into the truth or falsity of the statements contained in the article quoted from the last-named paper. Since the hearing before the committee was closed Mr. ACKLEN has requested the committee to inquire into and report as to his motives in the action in the House, which was the subject of criticism in the above article. The committee do not feel justified in so doing under the terms of the resolution, nor are they willing to assume the task. They have to deal with the facts only. With Mr. ACKLEN'S motives they have nothing to do. In this construction of the resolution its mover originally concurred.

In his opening remarks before the committee Mr. ACKLEN said:

"Mr. Chairman, there are two counts in this resolution and in the accompanying statement. The first is as to whether on the 13th of January, 'taking advantage of a moment when no member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs was present, Mr. ACKLEN rose in his seat in the House and declared as follows: "I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the claims of certain citizens against the government of Nicaragua be referred to the Committee of the Whole and ordered to be printed."' That is one of the two questions upon which the committee has to pass. The other is as to whether I was called before the committee and forced to withdraw the report and apologize to the House by their order."

The committee do not limit the scope of their inquiry quite so narrowly as above stated by Mr. ACKLEN, but they have nothing to do with statements made in regard to Mr. ACKLEN'S conduct in this matter in the New York Herald, or in any other paper than the Post and Tribune, or with criticisms made upon his conduct elsewhere, or with the motives of that conduct, or with the recommendation of any action to be taken by the House. They propose to examine faithfully into the truth or falsity of the statements made in the one article referred to in the resolution under which they are acting, and having made their report in that regard they consider their duty ended.

The committee have heard fully all the testimony which has been offered to them, and did not close the hearing until Mr. ACKLEN had stated that he had nothing further to introduce by way of testimony or argument.

The testimony before the committee upon the subject of inquiry is partly from the RECORD itself and partly from other sources. In the RECORD of January 14, of the preceding day in the House, appears the following:

"CLAIM AGAINST NICARAGUA.

"Mr. ACKLEN. I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the claims of certain citizens against the government of Nicaragua be referred to the Committee of the Whole and ordered to be printed."

Just previous to this entry appears the following:

"Mr. ACKLEN. My colleague, Mr. KING, is paired with the gentleman from New York, Mr. HAMMOND."

From these entries it appears that on the 13th of last January, Mr. ACKLEN, not being a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in the absence of his colleague, Mr. KING, which absence was known to him, introduced a paper purporting to be a report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs by Mr. KING, which was printed at Mr. ACKLEN's request. A copy of this alleged report is appended hereto.

In the RECORD of January 21, of the preceding day in the House, the following appears:

"WITHDRAWAL OF REPORT.

"Mr. ACKLEN. On January the 13th instant, during the absence of my colleague, Mr. KING, I asked unanimous consent of the House to have printed a manuscript designated Report No. 86, House of Representatives, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, which I had myself prepared and placed in his hands, and which he had subsequently returned to me at my request. I ask that it be withdrawn, as it was submitted by me without authority from Mr. KING or from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it having taken no action on the matter. This was done through a mistake of mine.

"The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the request will be granted.

"There was no objection."

From this entry it appears that on the 20th of January Mr. ACKLEN withdrew the alleged report introduced by him January 13, and stated that he had himself prepared that report and submitted it without authority from Mr. KING or from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which had taken no action on the matter. This, he claims, was done through a mistake of his. These extracts from the RECORDS of January 14 and 21, with Mr. ACKLEN's remarks quoted above from the RECORD of January 31, comprise all that is to be found in the RECORD on the subject.

It further appears by testimony from other sources that Mr. ACKLEN was a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the Forty-fifth Congress, and as such made a report relating to certain Nicaragua claims, being House Report No. 96 of the Forty-fifth Congress, and the same appended to and made a part of the above alleged report; that in the extra session of the Forty-sixth Congress, April 23, he introduced in the House a resolution relating to the same claims, as follows:

"Resolved, That a select committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, which committee shall have power to sit during the recess, to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua for indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which claims have heretofore been filed in the Department of State and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and said committee shall ascertain and determine what amounts and to what persons the government of Nicaragua is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session; and said committee shall give such public notice as it may deem necessary of the times and places when and where it will sit to hear said claims and testimony in support of the same, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. It shall also obtain and use all proofs relative thereto on file in the Department of State, and such other evidence as any party in interest may produce and offer that it may deem pertinent thereto. It shall have power to employ a clerk and a stenographer; and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the vouchers of the chairman of said committee."

which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs; that he was repeatedly before the committee in support of said resolution, and persistently and earnestly solicited a favorable report upon it from the whole committee and from individual members. The committee did not consider the resolution favorably, and Mr. ACKLEN was informed by his colleague, Mr. KING, that the action of the committee would probably be adverse to his wishes.

During the extra session Mr. ACKLEN had prepared a paper in the form of a report, being, with the exception hereafter to be noted, precisely the same as the new matter in the alleged report introduced by him January 13, and had handed it to Mr. KING, desiring its adoption by Mr. KING and the committee. This paper remained in Mr. KING's possession until after he had informed Mr. ACKLEN of the adverse sentiment of his committee on the subject, and until after the beginning of the regular session in December, when Mr. ACKLEN procured its return from Mr. KING to himself. From that time until he introduced it, January 13, he had the sole charge of it. The original manuscript was produced before the committee. It consists of two half-sheets of foolscap paper, (linen,) each written on both sides, and of a copy of the resolution printed on the second and third pages of the alleged report written on another sheet of similar paper. In the last sentence of the last paragraph but one before the closing resolution, after the words, "a delay in having said committee appointed," the words, "until the regular session" were originally written, but were erased before its introduction by Mr. ACKLEN. This would indicate a revision of the manuscript after the extra session.

At the bottom of the fourth page of the manuscript, on space originally left blank, a printed copy of resolution on the subject of the claims referred to has been pasted. Mr. ACKLEN stated that he pasted this printed copy upon the manuscript after its return from Mr. KING during the present session. When Mr. ACKLEN presented the alleged report January 13, Mr. Brown, the official stenographer then on duty, made the following memorandum:

"Mr. ACKLEN. I ask that a report be printed in a couple of cases already on the Public Calendar. So ordered."

Mr. ACKLEN sent the paper or papers to the desk by a page. The recollection of Mr. Brown and of Mr. Smith, the journal clerk, differs as to what was sent. Mr. Brown thinks there was nothing but manuscript, while Mr. Smith thinks the printed report from the Forty-fifth Congress was inclosed in the manuscript. This difference is not important. All is inclosed in a wrapper which was destroyed in the process of printing, on which was written in pencil the name "Mr. KING," not, however, by Mr. KING.

The unusual circumstance of the presentation of a report by a member not of the committee from which it purported to emanate attracted attention at the desk. Mr. Brown spoke of it to Mr. Smith, and Mr. Smith to the Speaker. Mr. Smith called the Speaker's attention to the fact that Mr. ACKLEN wanted to print a report from a committee of which he was not a member. And, for that reason he went to Mr. ACKLEN's desk with the paper in his hand. His testimony as to the conversation between himself and Mr. ACKLEN is somewhat indefinite and differs in slight particulars in his various statements of it—but is to the effect that he "understood Mr. ACKLEN to want the report to go on the Calendar, where his resolution was." Mr. Smith is doubtful whether Mr. ACKLEN said that he wished the report printed or reprinted—but is confident that he used one or the other expression.

As Mr. Smith is uncertain just what passed between him and Mr. ACKLEN at this moment, the committee must refer to the circumstances which are known to have happened at the time.

Mr. Smith's attention was excited by the unusual circumstances that Mr. ACKLEN wished to print a report from a committee of which he was not a member. He spoke to the Speaker about it. He said to the Speaker "that it appeared a very singular way of proceeding." With the irregular paper in his hand, to satisfy himself in regard to this "singular proceeding," he went at the moment to Mr. ACKLEN, and directly after the conversation with him the paper was filed as a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, made by Mr. KING, and the corresponding entry made in the Journal and the RECORD.

Mr. Smith states that it was his own impression, and that of other clerks at the desk, that Mr. ACKLEN desired to present the report for his colleague Mr. KING, in his absence. From these circumstances it is plain that this vigilant and experienced official, intent upon understanding this unusual proceeding, and applying to Mr. ACKLEN, at the moment for information in regard to it, received from him no explanation contrary to what appeared upon the face of the paper which he held in his hand, and to the entries which were immediately made in regard to it. The entry in the Journal was read the next morning in the House, and was uncorrected.

It remained as printed in both Journal and RECORD, without notice or correction, until January 16.

When Mr. KING returned, January 16, he was informed that Mr. ACKLEN had introduced a report during his absence purporting to come from him [Mr. KING] as a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Mr. KING at once sent for the report and having procured it went with it in his hand to Mr. ACKLEN's desk. There is a slight discrepancy between Mr. KING's statement of the conversation which ensued and some of Mr. ACKLEN's versions of it, but the committee find that Mr. KING showed Mr. ACKLEN the copy of the report and asked him what it meant. Mr. ACKLEN replied that he "supposed that Mr. KING had consented to the report." Mr. King said: "You could have thought no such thing." Mr. ACKLEN then replied, "I do not think I used the language in the RECORD, and there must be some mistake about it." He professed himself willing to do anything that would vindicate Mr. KING and the committee. Mr. KING then wrote a statement for Mr. ACKLEN to make in the House, which Mr. ACKLEN agreed to make. Mr. KING afterward consulted the chairman and other members of his committee, and on the next day the full committee at a regular session. The result of his consultation was a slight modification of the statement which he had previously prepared into the form in which it appears in the RECORD of January 21, as made by Mr. ACKLEN. Mr. ACKLEN made a statement in the House before Mr. KING came in with this statement which he subsequently withdrew, as unsatisfactory to Mr. KING, and substituted for it the statement prepared for him by Mr. KING and which appeared in the RECORD.

Mr. ACKLEN, in the statement made by him in the House January 20, says that what he had done was by a mistake of his own. In his remarks in the House and before the committee he claims in explanation of the above circumstances that he had got his resolution on the public Calendar; that he had lost his interest in the proceedings in regard to it in the Committee on Foreign Affairs; that he obtained the papers which he had given to Mr. KING, and asked to have them printed that he might have new copies of his old report, the first edition of which had been pretty well exhausted, with the manuscript "as addenda," because it contained a statement of the Senate's action upon a resolution identical or nearly so with his own; that he had forgotten that this manuscript purported to be a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or that his colleague's name appeared upon it; and that in his conversation with Mr. KING upon his return, intimating his belief that Mr. KING had approved the report, he was referring to his own report made in the Forty-fifth Congress, while Mr. KING had in mind the one made in the Forty-sixth Congress, a copy of which he then held in his hand. He also claims that he could have had no possible motive for imposing a false report upon the House; that the report was a public one, which could not have remained concealed, and the discovery of which would occasion him disgrace and injure the very claims whose interest he sought to promote.

But the committee consider that they have nothing to do with motives—they are only to inquire into the truth or falsity of the statements contained in the newspaper article referred to in the resolution under which they are acting. They therefore respectfully report:

That on the 13th of January Mr. ACKLEN, not being a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, presented a paper purporting to be a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs submitted by Mr. KING, a member of that committee, relating to the claims of certain citizens against the government of Nicaragua, which paper was printed at his request as such report.

That this paper was not a report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and had never been adopted or favorably considered by that committee.

That this was done in the absence of Mr. KING, whose absence was known to Mr. ACKLEN, and was without the knowledge or consent, direct or indirect, of Mr. KING, or of any member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That this alleged report, as presented, consisted of four pages of manuscript, with a printed copy of a resolution pasted on the bottom of the fourth page, and the printed report made by Mr. ACKLEN to the Forty-fifth Congress on the same claims.

That the manuscript was in the form of a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this Congress, and recommended the speedy passage of the resolution reported at its close.

That this manuscript was not contained in Mr. ACKLEN's original report.

That this manuscript was in the handwriting of Mr. ACKLEN's clerk, and was copied by him from a draught made by Mr. ACKLEN during the extra session of the present Congress.

That the manuscript so prepared by Mr. ACKLEN was handed to Mr. KING by Mr. ACKLEN during the extra session, with the desire that he should adopt it, and procure its passage through the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

That the committee did not adopt this as their report or consider favorably its subject-matter, and that it was returned to Mr. ACKLEN by Mr. KING during the present session, early in December, at Mr. ACKLEN'S request, with the information that the committee were probably adverse to it.

That Mr. ACKLEN subsequently examined it, and pasted upon it the printed copy of the resolution, instead of the manuscript copy he had given to Mr. KING, and introduced it so changed in the House, as above stated, January 13.

That Mr. ACKLEN, inquired of, at the time, by the journal clerk of the House, failed to convey to him any other impression than that he had introduced a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, for Mr. KING, then absent.

That it was Mr. KING, and not the chairman of the committee, who asked Mr. ACKLEN what the introduction of the report meant, and received an unsatisfactory reply. There was no conversation whatever between the chairman of the committee and Mr. ACKLEN on the subject.

Mr. ACKLEN was not "summoned before the committee," nor did he appear before it prior to his withdrawal of the report, nor so far as known to the committee was he informed that "he must withdraw the report and apologize to the House or vigorous proceedings would be instituted to expel him in disgrace;" that the entries made in the Journal and the RECORD, made under that impression, remained uncorrected until January 20, when Mr. ACKLEN withdrew the report at the request of Mr. KING, in manner and form as above stated.

All of which is respectfully submitted, and the committee ask to be discharged from further action under the resolution.

House of Representatives, Forty-sixth Congress, second session.—Report No. 86.

WOOLSEY TELLER AND ELIZA LIVINGSTON.

JANUARY 13, 1880.—Committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom were referred the memorials of Woolsey Teller, of San Francisco and of Eliza Livingston, of La Union, Salvador, together with the resolution adopted unanimously by this committee in the Forty-fifth Congress, under the report made on said cases by Mr. ACKLEN, then a member of this committee, report as follows:

Your committee, after a careful examination of the facts in said cases, find that they are fully set forth in the report made by Mr. ACKLEN, hereto appended and made a part hereof.

Your committee find, further, that the following resolution passed the Senate of the United States on the 27th of May, 1878:

"Resolved, That the President be, and is hereby, requested to communicate to the Senate, if to do so, in his opinion, be compatible with the public interests, any correspondence, not heretofore communicated, between this Government and that of Nicaragua relative to the claims against the latter of John G. Kendrick and other citizens of the United States for personal injuries on October 19, 1855, at Virgin Bay, in the territory of Nicaragua, alleged to have been inflicted by soldiers acting under the authority or by the permission of that government, and whether any, and, if any, what, steps ought to be taken by this Government to effect the adjustment of said claims, with a statement of the nature and amount thereof, and the names of the persons on whose behalf they have been severally preferred."

In answer thereto, the President, on December 9, 1878, replying through Hon. William M. Evarts, the Secretary of State, transmitted the correspondence had with the government of Nicaragua relative to claims of citizens of the United States against said government, and reply to the specific inquiry as to "what steps, if any, should be taken by this Government to effect an adjustment of said claims," replied, "that the most obviously practical method would be to submit them to the examination and decision of an impartial commission."

Acting upon the suggestion made by the President through the Secretary of State, your committee find that the Senate of the United States, on —— passed a resolution appointing the Messrs. HAMLIN, CONKLING, KIRKWOOD, EATON, and MORGAN as a committee on the part of the Senate to examine the papers on file in the Department of State, and hear any additional testimony that the claimants might desire to present.

Your committee find, further, that about the same time this committee, acting upon the report presented by Hon. Mr. ACKLEN, and likewise upon the suggestions from the President, through the Secretary of State, above referred to and quoted, unanimously authorized Mr. ACKLEN to report to the House the following resolution, which, in substance, is the same as that which passed the Senate:

"Resolved, That a select committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, which committee shall have power to sit during the recess, to investigate all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua for indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which claims have heretofore been filed in the Department of State, and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and said committee shall ascertain and determine what amounts and to what persons the Government of Nicaragua is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session; and said committee shall give such public notice as it may deem necessary of the times and places when and where it will sit to hear said claims and testimony in support of the same, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. It shall also obtain and use all proofs relative thereto on file in the Department of State, and such other evidence as any party in interest may produce and offer that it may deem pertinent thereto. It shall have power to employ a clerk and a stenographer, and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on the vouchers of the chairman of said committee."

Owing to the sudden and serious illness of Mr. ACKLEN, this, however, was not done, and the whole matter fell through by limitation with the expiration of the Forty-fifth Congress.

After a careful examination of all the facts connected with the said claims, your committee are fully convinced that the House Committee on Foreign Affairs should report said resolution to the House and recommend its passage, at as early a date as possible, and for the following reasons:

The testimony contained in the papers now on file in the Department of State, and that in addition to be presented, will require much time and attention for careful investigation, and this could hardly be done during the regular sessions of Congress, when members of this House labor under a pressure of business attendant thereon; whereas during the recess, the cases having been distributed among the members to be appointed, would receive that careful examination which their nature demands. As it would, furthermore, be unadvisable, if not impossible, for Congress to take definite steps to secure their satisfaction by the Government of Nicaragua until all should have been examined and reported upon, a delay in having said committee appointed would, for the reasons already given, almost certainly result in a failure to have them considered during the Forty-sixth Congress.

For these and other reasons, which must be apparent without their enumeration, your committee report back the resolution passed by this committee in the Forty-fifth Congress, and recommend its speedy passage:

"Resolved, That a select committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, which committee shall have power to sit during the recess, to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua for indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which claims have heretofore been filed in the Department of State and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and said committee shall ascertain and determine what amounts and to what persons the government of Nicaragua is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session; and said committee shall give such public notice as it may deem necessary of the times and places when and where it will sit to hear said claims and testimony in support of the same, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. It shall also obtain and use all proofs relative thereto on file in the Department of State, and such other evidence as any party in interest may produce and offer that it may deem pertinent thereto. It shall have power to employ a clerk and a stenographer; and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on the vouchers of the chairman of said committee."

[Forty-fifth Congress, third session.—House Report No. 96.]

Mr. ACKLEN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, to whom were referred the memorials of Woolsey Teller, of San Francisco, and of Eliza Livingston, of La Union, Salvador, praying redress for loss of property and injuries sustained by said Woolsey Teller and by the deceased husband of said Eliza Livingston from the government of Nicaragua, report as follows:

These two cases, covered as they are by like principles of international law and presenting facts strongly analogous, your committee have decided to embrace in one report.

The facts in the first of these cases, namely, that of Woolsey Teller, of San Francisco, as they appear from the papers in the possession of your committee, are as follows:

Woolsey Teller, an American citizen, was a merchant in Granada at the time that town was attacked on October 12, 1856, by the allied forces of San Salvador and Guatemala, the recognized soldiers of the Nicaraguan government. These troops took possession of his store, which they barricaded and used as a stockade, from which they kept up a fire upon the Americans in the plaza of the town, until driven out by the forces under General Walker from Masaya.

While occupying these premises they destroyed, and on their retreat carried away, merchandise which said Teller estimates to have been worth $5,000. He was also severely wounded in the right hand.

The foregoing facts are sustained by the affidavits of John H. Wheeler, at that time resident minister of the United States to the Republic of Nicaragua; Arthur Callaghan, of Philadelphia, at that time surgeon to the troops under General William Walker; William Keily, of Detroit, Michigan, at that time residing in Granada; Francis P. Anderson, of Nicaragua, a colonel in the army of that republic; and also by the affidavit of John M. Griffin, of Nicaragua, a captain in the army of that republic. These affidavits also go to show that said Teller was a non-combatant, and at the date of the attack quietly pursuing his business of merchant.

The amount of damages claimed by said Teller is:

For loss of property	$5,000
For wounds to his person	10,000
Consequential damages	15,000
Total	30,000

The evidence submitted goes to show that the injuries sustained, both to person and property, were wanton and unnecessary.

The facts in the case of Eliza Livingston, as they appear from the papers submitted, are as follows:

Dr. Joseph W. Livingston, deceased, (the husband of said Eliza, both American citizens, and residents of Cherry Valley, State of New York,) was in 1856, and for some years previous thereto, residing and practicing his profession as a physician in Leon, Nicaragua. He was also engaged in the importation of drugs and other merchandise. On May 3, 1856, he left the port of Realejo for New York, in company with and as attending physician to Edmund Randolph, who it appears was connected with Walker's government. He returned on the 6th of July of the same year. The country was then in a state of revolution, so he procured passes from General William Walker; and being assured of his personal safety, left on July 23, and proceeded to Leon, his place of residence, where he arrived July 26. There he was arrested and imprisoned until July 30 when he was informed that unless he made application for a passport to leave the state his confinement would continue. Securing a passport, he proceeded to Chinendaga, where he was again detained by military orders until August 19, at which date he was conducted, with his family, to the frontier and released.

These facts are sustained by the statement of Livingston and by letters from H. S. Sanford, of New York, of William W. Campbell, of Cherry Valley, New York, and of John Derhon, of Raelejo. They further show that Livingston was a man of respectability and generally esteemed. Eight letters in Spanish from the Nicaraguan secretaries of state, war, and finance, and other public and high officials are also presented, showing his standing in Nicaragua, but which your committee deem it unnecessary to quote. No specific damages in money are set forth; but several thousand dollars are alleged to have been lost by a forced sale of property, besides his practice as physician, and hardships endured by his family as well as himself in his forced exile.

Your committee in an examination of these cases is forced into a consideration of the relationships existing at that time between the governments of Nicaragua and the United States.

Avoiding unnecessary detail, it is yet deemed requisite to state, to a full understanding of these international relationships, that William Walker and his followers, in the interest of a certain revolutionary faction of Nicaragua, took possession of the capital of that republic on October 14, 1855, and had established a provisional government under the presidency of Don Patricio Rivas, but which did not take shape as a political organization claiming to rule the state until December 1 of that year. An armed resistance was still continued, however, by the opposing faction, styling themselves legitimists, in which they were assisted by the neighboring states, and notably by Costa Rica. At this time a corporation known as the Accessory Transit Company, which had been formed for the purpose of keeping open the line of communication from the Gulf to the Pacific Ocean by the way of the Nicaraguan route, was being managed, it is alleged, in the interests of the revolutionary faction under Walker, and under cover of a legitimate business was evading the neutrality laws then existing between the United States and the government of Nicaragua, and transporting arms and men to swell the revolutionary forces. These acts created great hostility on the part of the legitimists, and culminated in the attack on the steamer San Carlos by the fort of San Carlos on October 18, and the massacre at Virgin Bay on April 7, 1856, in both of which American citizens lost their lives.

An interruption of the diplomatic relations between the two governments was caused by the hasty recognition of the Walker faction by the then resident minister of the United States, John H. Wheeler. These were not restored until Mirabeau B. Lamar was accredited as the minister of the United States to Nicaragua, vice Wheeler.

Claims arising from the Virgin Bay massacre and other causes growing out of the intestine struggles between the different states of Central America were presented by the United States Government through their minister, but further complications arose by the declaration of war between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, which ended in the final overthrow of Walker's provisional government.

A claims convention was arranged with Costa Rica on July 26, 1860, by which all claims between that government and the United States were satisfactorily adjusted. In the case of Nicaragua, however, when steps had been taken looking to the establishment of a like commission, another question arose.

This government set up counter-claims against the United States for the bombardment and burning of San Juan del Norte, or Greytown, by Captain Hollins, and for a violation of the neutrality laws in permitting the departure of William Walker and his followers from the States, and for furnishing or permitting him to be furnished with supplies and munitions of war from their ports, and they insisted, and your committee think justly, that these counter-claims against the United States should be entertained, examined, and passed upon by any commission to be established.

The comity of nations, as well as our own national honor, requires that in a consideration of claims and counter-claims the same justice should be meted out to Nicaragua that we demanded and exacted of England in the Geneva award.

Your committee are of the opinion that these cases give rise to some questions of international law analogous to those considered in the Washington treaty between England and the United States, and, with a full appreciation of the importance attaching to the issues raised by these cases, your committee offer the following resolution and recommend the passage of the same:

"Resolved, That a select committee of five members of this House be appointed by the Speaker, which committee shall have power to sit during the recess, to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the Government of Nicaragua for indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds, and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which claims have heretofore been filed in the Department of State and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and said committee shall ascertain and determine what amounts and to what persons the government of Nicaragua is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session; and said committee shall give such public notice as it may deem necessary of the times and places when and where it will sit to hear said claims and testimony in support of the same, and shall have power to send for persons and papers and administer oaths. It shall also obtain and use all proofs relative thereto on file in the Department of State, and such other evidence as any party in interest may produce and offer that it may deem pertinent thereto. It shall have power to employ a clerk and a stenographer, and the necessary expenses of said committee shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, on the vouchers of the chairman of said committee."

"SAN FRANCISCO, August 10, 1878.

"SIR: In the year 1857 I lodged in the Department of State, Washington, a claim for $15,000 against the Republic of Nicaragua, for wounds received and spoliation of property, which claim was well authenticated by the testimony of creditable persons who were cognizant of its merits. I have the acknowledgment of the Department that it has been received and filed. I have subsequently received letters from the Secretary of State that my claim should receive proper attention, but up to the present time, and after a lapse of over twenty years, my Government has not taken any effective steps to bring the government of Nicaragua to a recognition of my demand, and thereby reimburse me, in a measure, for the damages to my person and property.

"The subject has been discussed by the different ministers accredited to Nicaragua, and latterly by Hon. George Williamson, who told me in April the subject of claims has been diplomatically exhausted, and that, consequently, nothing remains but for our Government to bring that of Nicaragua to a just settlement; but, sir, there is a hitch somewhere that has prevented our Government from proceeding further than a diplomatic correspondence; a something that causes it to recoil from bringing the question to a direct issue.

"Nicaragua has put in a counter-claim against the Government of the United States for the bombardment and burning of San Juan del Norte, or Greytown, and for a violation of the neutrality laws in permitting the departure of Walker from this country, and the furnishing of and dispatch of supplies from our ports, to enable him and his followers to levy war upon her government and people, claiming that by so doing our Government has placed itself in the same category of wrong-doing that the English did in permitting the fitting out of the Alabama to wage war upon our commerce.

"I have recently been told by good authority that this counter-claim is the obstacle in the way of demanding a settlement from Nicaragua, as, if the question should be left to an arbitration, which, perhaps, in equity our Government could not refuse to accept, the unbiased judgment of such a court would condemn our Government to recognize a principle which she obliged the English government to recognize.

"In the case of an arbitration, as in the case of the Geneva court, I think equity would be meted to both parties, and the sufferings of American citizens for outrages perpetrated on them in Nicaragua, before and during the Walker war, could be in a measure relieved.

"Many and heavy are the claims justly made against Nicaragua, as an examination of them will demonstrate. Some of them have been standing over twenty-five years, others over twenty years. Some are for murders of innocent and defenseless American citizens while seeking protection under the folds of their country's flag, others for imprisonment, wounds, and spoliations, and although I cannot state the amount, even approximately, it is large, covering millions of dollars.

"In view of the apparent or real abandonment on the part of the executive branch of the Government of the interests of her citizens who have laid their claims before it and have asked its interposition, I appeal to you, sir, and pray you, as a Representative of the nation, to take the initiatory and necessary steps to call for the papers relative to these claims, and, when furnished, to take such further action as will bring the question to a final settlement.

"If these claims be just, as they undoubtedly are, Nicaragua should be obliged to pay them; if it be found that our Government has committed a wrong, equity, honor, and the comity of nations should be held sacred by us, and we do to others that which we have demanded should be done to us.

"I have no doubt, now that a quarter of a century has elapsed and the passions and the issues that swayed men's minds at the time Greytown was burned have been modified by time, if that question were examined by an impartial jury, they would find that an officer of our Government had proceeded in a manner that will not bear the scrutiny of the impartial historian and just legislator. Much the same may be said of the advent and permanency of Walker for two years in Nicaragua. I was in that country at the time and know the influences that were working to extend the area of the 'peculiar institution' into all of the five Central American republics, and fear our Government winked at many violations of the neutrality laws, when they could have been prevented, thereby laying itself open to the charges made by Nicaragua.

"I have the honor to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

"WOOLSEY TELLER.

"Hon. HORACE DAVIS, Present."

"LA UNION, SALVADOR, November 14, 1878.

"SIR: I beg to present the following memorial to your honorable body, asking such redress as it may in its judgment, upon a review of the papers and facts, consider I am entitled:

"In 1856 my late husband, Dr. Joseph W. Livingston, a native of New York, was living in Leon, Nicaragua, where he had resided for several years previous, engaged in the practice of his profession. He was also engaged in the importation of drugs and other merchandise, and was so successful that in the practice of his profession alone his income amounted to over $4,000 and was steadily increasing. In the spring of 1856 he went to New York to purchase supplies, and having bought over $6,000, principally in drugs, returned to Nicaragua the last of July. Upon reaching Leon, on July 26, 1855, was arrested by an armed force and thrown into prison by order of the government of Nicaragua. At the time of his arrest was searched and everything taken from him, (none of which were returned,) consisting of private papers of very great value to him. Neither Dr. Livingston nor his friends could ascertain any reason as to the cause of his arrest and imprisonment further than it was a military necessity. After being in jail for several days he was sentenced to be shot without trial or investigation, which sentence, in all probability, would have been carried out but for the earnest and forcible protest presented by our minister, Hon. John H. Wheeler. Dr. Livingston was kept in prison in Leon four days longer, only allowed to see his family in presence of the guard and upon giving the assurance they would speak in the Spanish language and in a loud tone. At the expiration of six days he, with his family, were removed to Chinendaga. While in Chinendaga an attempt was made to assassinate him, which would have been successful but for the interference of friends.

"On the 19th of August he was released (after being in prison twenty-five days) through the influence of our minister, Hon. John H. Wheeler, and General Belloes, the commander of the Salvador troops, but banished the country, being conducted to the frontier by an armed escort. He and his family were turned loose in a section of country entirely uninhabited, where it was impossible to obtain either food or shelter, exposed to the intense heat of the tropical sun by day and the incessant rains by night, it being the rainy season. For four days we were thus exposed with our eight young and helpless children, the oldest being not over nine years of age. As our dwelling had been plundered when we were removed to Chanandaga, we were not able to bring the common necessities of life with us, even if we had been permitted to do so. By this arbitrary arrest and imprisonment and banishment my husband's business and professional prospects were blasted, his home broken up, his goods and household furniture stolen or destroyed, and himself and family forced into exile among strangers, to begin the world anew. That the action of the Nicaraguan government was as unprovoked as it was outrageous and tyrannical is clearly stated in the letter of Hon. John H. Wheeler to Dr. Livingston, dated August 21, 1858, in which he states the real reasons of his (Dr. Livingston's) arrest was owing to his being a citizen of the United States.

"By evidence on file in the Department of State, Washington, it is proven that Dr. Livingston, from his first arrival in Nicaragua, held himself entirely aloof from the domestic politics of the republic, never directly or indirectly interesting himself in them. As an American citizen and the widow of Dr. Livingston, in behalf of myself and orphan children, I appeal to your honorable body for redress and indemnity. Argument has been exhausted. This claim was presented to the Department of State by Dr. Livingston during his life-time, (in 1857.) Our minister, Hon. George Williamson, has corresponded for five years with the government of Nicaragua upon this subject, using every argument which could possibly be brought forward, all of which without avail, as his letters to our Government will show.

"The government of Nicaragua do not deny the fact of my husband's arrest, imprisonment, and banishment; on the contrary, acknowledge all the facts in the case, but refuse to render satisfaction. The question is not now one of an individual, but has become national in its character. (All through Central America are scattered citizens of the United States, who are engaged in various occupations.)

"Instances have occurred in which American citizens claimed to be English subjects so as to obtain even temporary protection. While our representatives may be ever so willing to extend protection to their countrymen, they are not able to do it, owing to their not being sustained by the Government, of which fact the petty republics are well aware. If our Government has concluded not to demand redress in a case like that I have the honor to present, and to extend protection to its citizens who come to this country to engage in business with a view of increasing the commerce of the United States, at the same time to improve their own fortunes, the sooner publicity is given to that fact the better.

"In conclusion, I respectfully ask you to send for the papers on file in the United States legation, Guatemala, and the Department of State, Washington, especially the letters written to the Secretary of State by Hon. George Williamson, United States minister for Central America.

"I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

"NEW YORK, August 20, 1858.

"SIR: I beg leave to submit to you the following statement of outrages upon my rights as an American citizen and upon my property at the hands of the government of Nicaragua, by arbitrary imprisonment and exile and sacrifice of my property.

"My family residence is Cherry Valley, in this State. I have temporarily resided in Nicaragua, in the practice of my profession as a physician. On the 3d of May, 1856, I left the port of Realejo for New York, in company with Mr. Randolph, as his physician, with an engagement to accompany him to this city in that capacity. At the time of our leaving the country was in peace, but on my return on the 6th of July I found it in a revolution. I immediately made application to General Walker for a passport to proceed to the city of Leon, the place of my residence, which was granted. On the 23d of July a gentleman by the name of Green came from Leon, on his way to Granada, and informed me that the roads were perfectly safe, and also that Don Sebastian Salines, secretary of state, had requested him to state to me, in case I had arrived in the state, to come on immediately, and to assure me that I could do so with perfect safety. I accordingly went on to Leon, where I arrived on the 26th of the same month. Before arriving, at three miles from Leon, I was arrested by a guard of soldiers and dragged to prison, without any cause being assigned, except that I was an American citizen. I was shut up in prison, in close confinement, until the 30th of the same month, when I was informed by the government that unless I made application for a passport to leave the state they would keep me in prison during the war. I was thus forced to make application for a passport, which was granted, and I was compelled to leave the same day for San Salvador. On my arrival at Chinendaga I found that the general and chief of the forces at Leon had ordered the military authorities not to allow me to proceed. I immediately informed the government of the fact. On the following day the commander of the post received orders to carry out this arbitrary exile. This was repeated three times before I could finally get away from where I was in constant fear of my life. My house was surrounded by a guard of twenty men, and I narrowly escaped assassination by them at midnight, undertaken by order of the commander-in-chief. I have never compromised my nationality during my residence in that country. The only motive assigned for my imprisonment was the fact that I was an American citizen, and consequently supposed to be friendly to the cause of General Walker and his party. The being obliged to leave the State in so summary a manner has been cause of great loss to me. I have lost over $4,000 in cash, besides the entire ruin of my business there. I had made arrangements for the purchase of a sugar and cattle estate previous to my leaving for New York, and made preparations to carry on sugar-planting on a large scale. All was destroyed by my imprisonment and banishment from the State. I transmit herewith letters to the authorities and others in San Salvador from the highest officials in Nicaragua, and from the government itself, showing the consideration I enjoyed there, and that there could be no just cause for this outrage upon my rights as an American citizen and the destruction of my property. I present these facts to you, praying for such action as may secure me just indemnity from the Nicaraguan government.

"Hon. John H. Wheeler (the United States minister at Nicaragua) is cognizant of these facts, and could substantiate them, he having entered a protest against the threat made to have me shot.

"I have known Dr. Livingston from his boyhood, and entertain toward him a near relationship, my wife being his sister. I had previously spoken with him on the subject of his claim, and believing it to be a good one, am rejoiced that it is now put in the way of a rigorous prosecution.

"Dr. Livingston was United States consul at Leon, and the seizure of his property and the imprisonment of his person were without color of law, and were not warranted by any circumstances even of suspicion.

"I need hardly add that Dr. Livingston belongs to the old family of that name on the Hudson, and is the lineal descendant of those who served the country well and honorably in the days that are past.

"Possessing the spirit of his ancestors, he does not feel disposed to submit tamely to outrages upon his property and his person. Commending the case to the favorable consideration of the Government,

"Mr. Derhon to Mr. Cass.

"REALEJO, April 30, 1859.

"SIR: I am requested by Dr. Joseph W. Livingston, a citizen of the United States, now residing at La Union, San Salvador, to make a written statement of the circumstances of his imprisonment and subsequent expulsion from the state of Nicaragua in the year 1856.

"At the request of members of the Walker-Rivas government, Dr. Livingston left Leon for the United States as the professional adviser of one Edmund Randolph, who had entered into some engagement with the government by which they considered it necessary said Randolph should be promptly in New York. From the state of his health, it was deemed impossible for him to make the journey without the attendance of a medical man. During the absence of Dr. Livingston the revolution against Walker broke out, the news of which Dr. L. met at Fort Castillo on his return. After a delay at Granada of some days, occasioned by want of conveyance, and I believe some difficulty in obtaining a passport to pass Walker's lines, he arrived in Leon on the evening of the 25th of July. Before having communication with any person, he reported himself to the government, was immediately thrown into prison, kept in close confinement for a week, and then sent from Leon under armed guard and kept a further time in confinement at Chinendaga, and then expelled the state. No specific charge was brought against him, and of course he had no trial. This imprisonment was made in direct violation to decrees just previously published, granting amnesty and protection to all persons reporting themselves to the government from Walker's camp. During Dr. Livingston's confinement he was neither provided by the government with bedding nor with subsistence.

"By this act of the authorities of Nicaragua, Dr. Livingston was unable to make an advantageous sale of his household furniture, to collect his debts, and arrange and close up a business of eight years' standing. He was driven to seek a new residence at an inclement season of the year, by which his family became sick, and he lost a year of business in consequence. I should think, from these causes, his actual losses could not have been less than $3,000, and more likely to reach $4,000.

"I have, &c.,

"JOHN DERHON."

Mr. COX. I now yield to the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN.]

Mr. ACKLEN. I ask that the communications which I send to the Clerk's desk be read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. They will be printed in the RECORD, if read.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 14, 1880.

DEAR SIR: Should the sub-committee deem the resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs restrictive in its character, I beg that, in justice to me, they will so inform me in time for me to have it enlarged by the House, so that every fact in the case may be reported on. Otherwise the only question which affects my character, namely, the "intention," may not be fully brought out.

Very respectfully,

J. H. A.

Hon. W. W. RICE,
Chairman Sub-Committee.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 17, 1880.

To the honorable chairman and members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

I respectfully state to the Committee on Foreign Affairs that I addressed to the sub-committee a letter requesting them to notify me whether, in their opinion, the resolution offered by me in the House and referred to your committee touching my conduct in the matters therein referred to authorized them, in ascertaining and reporting their views of the facts, also to report whether my conduct was corrupt or otherwise, and in the event they regarded the resolution as limited so to notify me, in order that I might have it so enlarged as to bring the whole matter, conduct, motive, and intention, fully and fairly before the House. I now make similar request of the full committee. That I committed a mistake I have already admitted to the House and the country. Without knowing what the views of the committee are as to the facts, I submit in great earnestness that their views as to what the facts are, if ascertained and reported with an absolute denial of all inquiry as to whether my conduct was corrupt or innocent, might by implication carry with them such a construction as an investigation of my intentions, motives, and objects I feel every assurance would make impossible.

Respectfully, &c.,

J. H. ACKLEN.

Mr. COX. The House will observe the terms of the resolution which Mr. ACKLEN himself offered and which the House adopted. Under that resolution the Committee on Foreign Affairs had no authority to go beyond the simple inquiry of fact as to the truth or falsehood of the statements made by one newspaper, the Detroit Post and Tribune. We had no authority to enlarge the scope of our inquiry. The gentleman himself might have made it larger when he offered the resolution. We have limited ourselves to the resolution directing an inquiry as to the truth or falsehood of the charge contained in the Detroit paper. We had no right to go beyond that in a matter of reputation and character. It would have been a very indelicate matter at best to have inquired into it, and certainly an outrage to have done so without the authority of the House.

I now renew my motion that the report be laid upon the table and printed, and that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

Mr. FROST. I desire to move a substitute for that motion.

Mr. COX. I will hear it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the case of Hon. J. H. ACKLEN be recommitted to said committee with instructions to report what action, if any, the House should take thereon.

Mr. COX. I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to resist any such motion. Under the best state of circumstances it would be very obnoxious to throw this investigation into that committee. We have enough to do in considering other matters. There should be a special committee on this subject. The Committee on Foreign Affairs are already somewhat embarrassed by their previous connection with this matter, in the House and in the newspapers; and I ask my friend not to insist upon his resolution.

Mr. FROST. I offered this amendment not being aware of the fact that the Committee on Foreign Affairs would object particularly to it. If, however, it be deemed advisable to refer this subject either to a special committee or to one of the other standing committees of the House, I have no objection.

My object in offering the resolution was to save the House from what I consider an embarrassing position. Certain facts have been reported to the House—have been read to the House. I scarcely conceive, however, that any gentleman present here would feel able to pass upon those facts in their present condition, at least not until they shall have been printed so that we may be enabled to take them fully into consideration. But after they shall have been considered and brought to our consideration in that form, I think it only proper that they should come accompanied by some recommendation to the House.

This matter is a very serious one—one upon which gentlemen may differ largely in their conclusions; having reached positive conclusions as to the facts, they may differ as to the proper action which should be taken. I think, therefore, that some committee should report what course we should pursue; what action this House ought to take upon a matter which touches so nearly its dignity and its honor.

Mr. COX. I would suggest to my friend from Missouri that my motion includes the printing of this report and the accompanying testimony. This is a question of privilege, and after the House shall have read at their leisure the report and the accompanying testimony, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FROST] can offer his resolution. I hope he will withdraw it for the present, and let the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

Mr. RICE. I desire to say but a single word. This resolution, adopted by the House and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, was drawn by Mr. ACKLEN, and its phraseology is such as he chose to adopt. When the Committee on Foreign Affairs held its first meeting to hear any testimony which might be offered upon the subject of the resolution, Mr. ACKLEN stated, as is set forth in the report, that the resolution confined the committee to but two points. One of those was whether, as stated in the Detroit Tribune and Post, that gentleman arose in his place in this House on a certain day and presented a report purporting to come from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The other point was whether he had been obliged—I do not use the exact language, but the substance of it—whether he had been obliged by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to withdraw that report and apologize to the House under the threat that otherwise proceedings should be instituted against him looking to his expulsion.

Considering the phraseology of the resolution, the construction put upon it by its framer coincided with the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs—that they were authorized under it to do nothing more than to inquire into the facts referred to in the article published in the Detroit Tribune and Post.

Into those facts the committee have inquired. Their report on those facts is as full as they can make it. It was proper, perhaps, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs should inquire into these statements, because the facts were somewhat peculiarly within their information or knowledge; but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is not proper to impose upon this committee, to the exclusion of their other pressing business, the duty of investigating the motives which prompted the facts in regard to which they have reported. That duty should not be imposed upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They have completed their duty under the resolution; not only that, but they have done fully all that the house could have expected the committee would do. I submit, therefore, that this House should now discharge the committee as moved by the chairman at their unanimous request. If, then, the gentleman from Missouri desires to press the matter, it will be proper for him to move the appointment of a special committee which shall recommend further action to the House. I trust that the motion of the chairman of the committee will be adopted, and that the committee will now be discharged from the further consideration of this subject.

Mr. FROST. I believe that I can modify my proposition so as to meet the approval of all parties by providing that a sub-committee, instead of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, shall undertake the duty named in my motion, which will then be a proper substitute for the proposition of the gentleman from New York, as the Committee on Foreign Affairs will thereby be discharged.

Mr. MCLANE. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with some attention to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] a member of that committee. If I understand their views they object to having that committee charged with an investigation into the character of an honorable gentleman on this floor. Now, that is not the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FROST] at all; and I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs that it is his duty instead of opposing to support the motion of the gentleman from Missouri. No further investigation is necessary under the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri. There is no occasion for a select committee. There is no occasion for any further investigation by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The motion of the gentleman from Missouri is that the report be recommitted, with instructions to the committee to report upon the facts their opinion as to what action is proper for this House to take.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that no select committee and no other committee of this House is so proper to perform this duty as the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The allegation made against the honorable gentleman from Louisiana is that he presented to the House a paper purporting to be a report from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but which was not in fact a report from that committee. The Committee on Foreign Affairs have reported substantially that that is true. They report that Mr. ACKLEN did in fact present such a report. Now, the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is a perfectly proper one, because it relieves individual members of the House from the very delicate duty of formulating a judgment upon those facts. It instructs the Committee on Foreign Affairs—the committee that has made this investigation—to submit what action is proper to be taken by the House.

Does this House want these facts investigated by another committee? Is it seemly, is it respectful to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that another committee should investigate these facts? Whether the resolution directing the inquiry was large and broad or narrow and confined is not material if the resolution enabled the Committee on Foreign Affairs to make the report which they have made to-day. There is no necessity for any further investigation by that or by any other committee. The gentleman from Missouri moves that the report be recommitted, with instructions that the Committee on Foreign Affairs shall report what action the House ought to take. No doubt the gentleman from Louisiana would himself make just such a motion, or propose, perhaps, a select committee to formulate some action for this House.

Now, it seems to me that in matters so delicate as this, touching the character, the motives, the good faith of a member of this House, the inquiry should be confined to the simplest possible issue. It is enough for us if the particular offense charged is investigated. If upon that investigation the committee making it think that no action is necessary, they ought to say so. Those who have made the inquiry ought to take that responsibility, and not throw us into that wide field. If, on the other hand, it be their opinion that there ought to be some action taken by the House, then they ought to recommend what action. This, in my judgment, is the duty of that committee. The question is not whether they like it or not. We all know well that no man on this floor can like such a duty. It is not the Committee on Foreign Affairs alone that would revolt from the performance of that duty, if at liberty to revolt. The Committee on Foreign Affairs having had this subject in hand, having made the investigation, having their opinion formed, I submit to the honorable chairman of the committee that he ought not to shrink from the full performance of his duty.

Mr. COX. I have never shrunk from the full performance of my duty even on matters as to which I did not like the duty imposed on me. I will say to my friend from Maryland [Mr. MCLANE] that the delicacy pertaining to this matter in connection with the Committee on Foreign Affairs arises from the very nature of the charge made in the newspapers, the offense charged being an attempt to palm off as a report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs a paper which was not such a report. The matter, therefore, in its initiation concerns the Committee on Foreign Affairs; it concerns particularly one of the members of that committee, the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. KING.] It was indelicate on the part of the House to have sent this matter to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I was not in my seat when the matter was referred to us, or I should have resisted the reference.

Now, if the honorable gentleman from Maryland, after having all the facts here collated and arranged, as I think, faithfully and truthfully, deems it proper to propose any action, let him not shrink from that action. It is not for the Committee on Foreign Affairs to suggest to that gentleman or to the House what action it may be proper for the House to take. The facts are spread before the House for its judgment. If any member thinks it proper to offer any resolution, why should he not do so? I suggest to this House that the testimony be printed; the report be printed; that members have a chance therefore to read it, to ponder it carefully; and if then further action is to be taken, let it be sent to a committee which will be more indifferent perhaps than the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or at least which might have an opportunity of reviewing it more impartially than the Committee on Foreign Affairs could as to its final conclusion. We have given you the facts, why do you shrink from applying any remedy?

Mr. DUNNELL. While the report was being read, Mr. Speaker, I think every member of the House must have felt that the report, while it——

Mr. MCLANE. The gentleman from New York yielded the floor to me.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand it, and has recognized the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. DUNNELL. It was not so understood that the gentleman from New York yielded to the gentleman from Maryland.

Now, Mr. Speaker, while the report shows the industry of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, it does not terminate with any positive opinion or recommendation upon which we are to act. I fail to see why the chairman of this committee or the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] speaking for the committee, why this committee shall avoid the completion of this work. I think both sides of the House were favorably impressed with the fairness of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri. Certain things have been said, and a gentleman of this House has asked for an investigation. If he has erred in restricting the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the extent of that investigation it is before us, it is now before the country, the House has proceeded thus far in an investigation which it has ordered, and it is now the duty of the House to carry on that investigation, so that the gentleman from Louisiana may either be exonerated or properly censured by this House.

That committee, Mr. Speaker, cannot do this work half so well as the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If it is delicate for that committee it would be delicate for any other committee. There is no reason why that committee should avoid this work because it is a delicate thing. The committee understand all the facts in the case; they know more about this case than any sub-committee or any special committee can know; they have gone over the ground; and then, why should we make some other committee go over the same ground, or make a special committee go over the same ground?

Mr. Speaker, I insist that the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri ought to be the expression of this House.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the motion made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.] I think the Committee on Foreign Affairs ought to be, at present at least, discharged from the further consideration of any question connected with this matter. And I do so simply upon the ground——

Mr. KIMMEL. Mr. Speaker, there is so much confusion in the House that the gentleman from Tennessee cannot be heard in this part of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. It is the fault of the members themselves. Members will resume their seats and preserve order.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. The gentleman from Louisiana has intimated to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, through the letters read this morning, that he has something which will show on his part no willful disrespect to the House and no intention to commit any willful wrong, and he is therefore entitled in that view to be heard by another committee, the Committee on Foreign Affairs having declined. The committee seem to have regarded their limit of authority as circumscribed by direction of the House. They claim to have discharged the duty imposed on them. They have reported the facts. Now, sir, taking the two in connection, there lies behind it for some reason I do not know, nor can I tell, a question of extreme delicacy. The chairman has said that; he has said that the Committee on Foreign Affairs does not want to be further charged with the responsibility and duty connected with any further investigation of this subject.

Mr. COX. Does not my friend from Tennessee understand the reason for that delicacy on the part of the Committee on Foreign Affairs? It is not general; but it is because the committee were involved in this matter—because one of the committee was more or less involved. I am sure the gentleman must understand that.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I take that, and agree with you in the motive of delicacy which induced you to ask the House to discharge you from the further consideration of the subject; but now I think it is proper and consistent with the dignity of the House that this report and the proof taken by the committee shall be first printed, understood by the House, and then, if the House feel it is wrong in any regard, before they shall proceed either in passion or prejudice to one side or the other, that they shall have the motives of the gentleman from Louisiana inquired into. Sir, I cannot find it in my heart, standing as he does here a young man on the threshold of his representative career, to refuse him when he asks me to judge of the motives of his conduct. I will do it, but he must understand if his motives are corrupt he must expect the severest judgment of the House; but if he has committed a wrong, simply an unintentional wrong, let the administration of a rebuke by this House be sufficient punishment. But in the present attitude of the question I do not think, in the face of his own request and in the face of the request of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that we can do any more, in simple justice and charity, than to meet the request of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, it is made your duty to appoint a Committee on Foreign Affairs, the jurisdiction of which committee, by Rule No. 90, shall be to take into consideration all matters which concern the relations of the United States with foreign nations, and which shall be referred to them by the House, and to report their opinion on the same.

It will not be claimed by any gentleman here that the investigation upon which that committee have made this report came within the jurisdiction prescribed by the rule I have just read. It would have been improper to refer this question to that committee except that the paper ordered to be printed by this House at the instance of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] had, as shown by the record, received the sanction of the committee, and had been prepared by one of its members, General KING. To this extent and for this reason it was, perhaps, not improper that the reference should be made to it.

Gentlemen have complained that the report just read did not discuss fully the motives that prompted Mr. ACKLEN in what he did. I beg gentlemen to observe that there was a single inquiry referred to that committee, and that was to inquire into the truth or falsity of the charges alleged against Mr. ACKLEN in one of the newspapers of the country. It was not proper to inquire into any other or extraneous matter. The committee was restricted by the special pleading contained in the resolution itself—a simple question of fact. They performed their duty fairly, impartially, and honestly. They desired to avoid exciting any prejudice against Mr. ACKLEN, or to whitewash him. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] insisted that the Committee on Foreign Affairs is more familiar with all the facts in the case than any other committee, and hence the resolution and report should be recommitted to them. I beg to say to the gentleman that the testimony accompanying the report and the report place in the possession of this House all the facts which came to the knowledge of the Committee on Foreign Affairs touching the inquiry propounded by the resolution. Any special committee that may be raised, or any one of the standing committees, or the House itself, has all the facts before it that were before the Committee on Foreign Affairs. That committee, by a unanimous vote, instructed its chairman to resist any proposition to remit this question back to it.

There is another point I desire to make, and I am sure I violate no rule of propriety in making it. It is this: one of the members of the committee, General KING, by the published report appears to be the author of it, and this is, as can be seen, doing him injustice. Now, if the Committee on Foreign Affairs had been charged with the duty of ascertaining what was the motive of Mr. ACKLEN, General KING, as a member of that committee, would not only be placed in a position to protest against any authority for making the report or printing it, but he would be one of the judges whose duty it would be to ascertain and report the motive that prompted the act. This would be a delicate position in which to place any member of this House.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, the report may be laid upon the table and ordered to be printed, and that the Committee on Foreign Affairs will never again be called upon to make any other report in this matter.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following as an amendment to the resolution offered by the gentleman from Missouri:

The Clerk read as follows:

That said committee inquire and report whether the action of Mr. ACKLEN in the premises was the result of corrupt or improper motives, or arose through mistake or misunderstanding on his part.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The resolution just offered I consider outside and not authorized as any inquiry the committee can make. If it is true, as admitted on all hands, the committee has acted honestly, has reported fairly, fully, and frankly all the facts connected with this transaction, I submit it to the House as a proposition, if they report upon the corrupt motives or it was an honest purpose of Mr. ACKLEN in making this report, whether in voting on that proposition you would be bound by it, when you have all the facts in your possession, reported fairly and fully, when Mr. ACKLEN had at the last moment reported he had no further facts to offer. Whether they found it was done through ignorance, and not done through any corrupt motive, the House is in possession of all the facts, and we are to judge of the motives, and no other persons can take our place. Nobody else can enter into our minds and judge for us. That responsibility is left with me and every other member of the House, and we cannot shrink from that responsibility. I believe the position and argument taken by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] is unanswerable on that point: that all the facts are here; that we are to deal with them and pass our verdict upon them.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to make a single remark. It occurs to me, if any in this House have cause to complain of the action of the gentleman from Louisiana, it is the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs themselves. And if, after they have investigated the facts relating to it, they are satisfied to let the matter drop there, then I think it would be the part of wisdom on the part of this body to allow it to be done.

Mr. RICE. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, that if there is to be further investigation into this matter, it is the desire of every member of this House that the investigation be conducted in the fairest and most impartial manner. But to constitute the Committee on Foreign Affairs a tribunal to pass upon this question seems to me would give rise to a suspicion that the examination might not be so conducted.

The chairman of the committee has referred to the question of delicacy on the part of the committee. Let me elaborate that point. General KING is a member of that committee. It is said that there is strong feeling between him and Mr. ACKLEN on the subject.

How improper, then, would it be that General KING and his colleagues should be the committee to try Mr. ACKLEN. It is further the fact that some of the testimony comes from the members of this committee. How can they properly pass upon testimony emanating from themselves? I trust that all members of the House will see, therefore, it is proper if this investigation is to be continued that it should be by a new and entirely impartial committee, not to be influenced by any personal considerations such as those to which I have referred and not to be called upon to pass upon testimony emanating from any of their own number.

Mr. DUNNELL. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Is he willing to admit that the report already made is an unfair one because of the composition of the Committee on Foreign Affairs?

Mr. RICE. If the gentleman will read that report he will find that it takes the facts from the record and from undisputed testimony. There is not a single fact stated there which was disputed by Mr. ACKLEN. The only question is what shall be done consequent upon this statement of undisputed facts. If it should come to consider that point, the committee will be called upon to act in a judicial capacity, rather than as heretofore merely to gather up and report to the House that in regard to which there is no dispute.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see how the House is to escape from the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The chairman of that committee and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. RICE,] who likewise is on that committee, announced to this House the fact that there is a member of the committee who stands almost in the attitude of prosecutor toward the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. KING. I deny that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to make the slightest reflection upon the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. KING,] but I understand from these several gentlemen that the gentleman from Louisiana has a great deal of feeling in the matter.

Mr. KING. I deny that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Louisiana has not the floor at present. I have no objection to his being heard hereafter. The testimony itself discloses the fact that that gentleman felt indignant and presented to his colleague the paper which has been brought before the House.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. BLOUNT. I have the floor and object to being interrupted. The whole circumstances in regard to the action of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] toward his colleague in this matter are familiar to the House, and I shall not recall them. They are enough to satisfy us that whether or not he had any of the feeling of a prosecutor about it, his relation to the subject may naturally bias his feeling in an investigation of the conduct of his colleague.

And no matter how the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING] may feel toward his colleague, the Committee on Foreign Affairs have repeatedly, through several of their members, stated that they felt it was an indelicate thing, on account of the fact of Mr. KING being on that committee, that they should be required to pursue this investigation any further. A simple suggestion that with reference to this matter the committee stands in a delicate position, a simple suggestion that by possibility there may not be an absolutely just investigation of Mr. ACKLEN'S conduct, is enough to induce this House to say at once they will not require that committee to act further. At any rate it is enough for me, and I shall not consent by my vote to its being done.

What, then, Mr. Speaker, shall we do? The gentleman from New York asks that this report shall be printed. What then? It is in the power of every gentleman in this House to take that record and investigate it for himself; and it is in the power of any member on this floor to rise to a question of privilege after having examined these facts, and to submit a resolution requiring further investigation; and if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] has been guilty of conduct unbecoming a member of this House, to have that examined, and to give this House the opportunity hereafter to vindicate itself in such a manner as it may see fit. But, for the present, it seems to me that the recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs is sufficient, and I trust it will be sufficient. The gentleman who seeks now to offer this substitute will have an opportunity to bring it up hereafter. Any other member of this House will have that opportunity, and can bring it up when every member of this House shall have examined the testimony and be the better prepared for intelligent action. I hope the motion submitted by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs will be agreed to.

Mr. KING. I desire to say that I fully agree to the proposition of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have had no desire from the first that that committee should sit as an investigating committee on this matter. It is well known to the members of that committee that I resisted the proposition of the member from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] asking that the Committee on Foreign Affairs should examine his case, and urged, if it should be done at all, that it should be done by a select committee. This examination was not invited by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The whole matter had been disposed of when Mr. ACKLEN himself reopened it and insisted that the examination should be made by the Foreign Affairs Committee. I have had no personal feeling in the matter beyond that I realized that my name and the committee's authority had been misused in this House. That was corrected without my rising upon this floor, and I have never appeared before upon this floor on this subject. I cannot see why any one should infer that I have personal feelings in the matter. I certainly have none; and in dealing with a constitutional question I trust I shall always rise above a sense of mere personal consideration.

I do not wish this matter to be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have heretofore abstained from expressing any wish one way or the other, and the chairman of the committee will sustain me when I say I did not vote upon this report. It was understood that this should be my course from the beginning. This matter cannot with my consent be made now to degenerate into a mere personal issue between Hon. Mr. ACKLEN and myself. All controversy was closed between us by his statement, made to the House on the 21st ultimo, in which he declared he had used my name without my authority.

Mr. COX. I now yield to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. BRIGHT.]

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I understand the position of the case as it is before the House at this time to be that the Committee on Foreign Affairs have made a report which they say is exhaustive of the power which was committed to them, that power being simply derived from a resolution directing them to make an inquiry into certain stated facts.

They have responded to the resolution of inquiry adopted by the House. They say they have denuded themselves of the obligations imposed upon them by the resolution of inquiry, and they now ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the matter.

Inasmuch as they have put a restricted construction upon that resolution, and inasmuch as they have responded to it in that way, as the case now stands before the House, it is not in a situation to refer the same back to the Committee on Foreign Affairs under the same resolution with the same restriction upon the committee, because that committee has exhausted the power conferred upon it by that resolution. I think if that be the view of the committee it ought to be discharged from the further consideration of this matter. It ought not to be recommitted to them.

If there is to be further action by a committee upon this subject, I would suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. FROST] the propriety of the appointment of a special committee with enlarged powers of inquiry into the whole matter that may be submitted to it. I understand that the report which has been made does not touch the animus of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. ACKLEN,] but it responds simply to naked facts in their restricted character. If there is to be a further prosecution of the matter by this House, if there is to be any punitive dispensation administered to the gentleman from Louisiana, if his character as a Representative and as a man is put in issue here, let him have the fullest and amplest field allowed him for an exhausting investigation of everything involved in the matter.

The House is in no condition to enter upon the consideration of the merits of this controversy. There has been no punitive recommendation made by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If there is to be any, let the subject go to a select committee to be appointed by the Speaker of the House, so that the Committee on Foreign Affairs may be relieved from the delicate situation in which they represent themselves to be. Such a course will cast no imputation upon the members who compose the Committee on Foreign Affairs, but will relieve them from the delicacy of the task of sitting in judgment upon the question of an invasion of the rights of that committee and of the rights of the House.

Inasmuch as the members of that committee feel a delicacy upon the subject, and I think propriety sustains them in that feeling, they ought to be relieved, and impartial men, who have not felt the heat of the controversy which has been engendered, but who will take up the matter coolly and calmly, should be selected to consider all the facts, and to report upon them as gentlemen who will have no feeling and no personal object whatever to accomplish. I therefore would suggest as an amendment to the resolution of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. FROST,] that the subject be referred to a select committee, and that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. COX. I will now yield to the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is ten minutes' time remaining.

Mr. COX. I will yield to the gentleman for two minutes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have listened with attention to the reading of the report in this case, and to what has been said by gentlemen who have preceded me. I think there is justice in the claim that it would be best not to recommit this subject to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I can appreciate the delicacy which those gentlemen feel in the matter. That committee is in a measure a party to the controversy or to the difficulty. It seems to me but fair that this subject, if recommitted at all, should be put in the hands of a special committee or of another standing committee of the House.

It also seems to me but fair that if the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ACKLEN] has any further evidence or argument to submit, or makes claim that he has any, he shall be heard. Nobody desires to bar anything which he may wish to present. We are not bound absolutely by the rules of a court, and we ought not to be.

Therefore if I have the right to offer a substitute—I do not know precisely how many resolutions or amendments are pending—I will offer as a substitute for the pending motions and amendments that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The proposed substitute will be read.

Mr. FROST. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FROST. There is now pending a substitute and amendment thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition is an amendment, and there is an amendment to that proposition pending. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] offers his as a substitute for the original motion, as the Chair understands.

Mr. FROST. I offered mine as a substitute for the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] had better move his as an amendment to the original motion.

Mr. FROST. But there is now an amendment pending to the substitute which I offered.

The SPEAKER. There is no amendment pending to the original motion.

Mr. FROST. No, not to the original motion.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman's amendment is a substitute for the original motion, then the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] can move to amend that original proposition.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move as an amendment to the original proposition that which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the report and evidence presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the case of Hon. Mr. ACKLEN be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee is hereby authorized to make further inquiry if it shall appear to be essential to a just judgment, and is instructed to report what action, if any, is required on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be upon the amendment just read to the original motion.

Mr. GARFIELD. A single word, if the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX] will allow me.

Mr. COX. I will yield to the gentleman for a moment.

Mr. GARFIELD. I concur in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] and for this reason: Primarily the great question presented here is a question of the constitutional rights of this House over its records. The charge against the gentleman is for an invasion of the privileges of the House in reference to its proceedings; and of course that is a charge of a very grave character.

It also respects of course the rights of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. In one sense they are the party alleged to be injured; and in a special sense one of their members is the alleged injured party. On the other hand the witnesses, the necessary witnesses, are first the member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs whose name is concerned in the paper presented, and next the whole committee, as to the transactions of the committee which are alleged to have been interfered with. They have properly told us the original facts, as they could tell them better than anybody else; they have stated to us, according to the order of the House, the facts that they find. They have said nothing, however, about the question of motive, which is of course essential to a just judgment.

Now, the question arises as to our constitutional privilege which appears to have been interfered with and as to the motive of that interference. To aid us in determining this question it seems to me proper that another committee not concerned in this matter at all, either as witnesses or as parties, should take it up; and in my judgment the Law Committee of the House is the fitting committee. If we authorize a select committee we put upon the Speaker what would be just now a very disagreeable and a very difficult duty. If we refer this question to a standing committee already appointed no one has any right to object. The committee named by the gentleman from Connecticut has been created for general law purposes. It is unconnected with this case. It is in a condition to act without bias. We ought on all accounts to do, first, justice to the privileges of the House and the integrity of our records; second, justice to the individual. I believe that the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut will do both.

Mr. COX demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the motion of Mr. COX by adding:
That the report and evidence presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs in the case of the Hon. Mr. ACKLEN be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, which committee is hereby authorized to make further inquiry, if it shall appear to be essential to a just judgment; and is instructed to report what action, if any, is required on the part of the House.

The amendment of Mr. HAWLEY was agreed to; there being—ayes 161, noes 22.

Mr. FROST. I withdraw the substitute which I offered.

The SPEAKER. The withdrawal of the substitute carries with it the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. FINLEY.] The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX,] which, as amended, provides that the report and testimony be printed, the Committee on Foreign Affairs discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the report and testimony be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary as proposed in the motion of the gentleman from Connecticut, which the House has already adopted.

The motion of Mr. COX, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REFUNDING THE NATIONAL DEBT.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3306, a bill (H. R. No. 4592) to facilitate the refunding of the national debt; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to facilitate the refunding of the national debt.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That all existing provisions of law authorizing the refunding of the national debt shall apply to any bonds of the United States bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum which may hereafter become redeemable: Provided, That in lieu of the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and the acts amendatory thereto, and the certificates authorized by the act of February 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt," the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds in the amount of not exceeding $500,000,000, which shall bear interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum, redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after twenty years, and payable forty years from the date of issue, and also notes in the amount of $200,000,000 bearing interest at the rate of 3½ per cent. per annum redeemable, at the pleasure of the United States, after two years, and payable in ten years from the date of issue; but not more than $40,000,000 of said notes shall be redeemed in any one fiscal year, and the particular notes to be redeemed from time to time shall be determined by lot under such rules as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe. The bonds and notes shall be, in all other respects, of like character and subject to the same provisions as the bonds authorized to be issued by the act of July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," and acts amendatory thereto: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize an increase of the public debt.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized, in the process of refunding the national debt, to exchange at not less than par any of the bonds or notes herein authorized for any of the bonds of the United States outstanding and uncalled bearing a higher rate of interest than 4½ per cent. per annum, and on the bonds so redeemed the Secretary of the Treasury may allow to the holders the difference between the interest on such bonds from the date of exchange to the time of their maturity, and the interest for a like period on the bonds or notes issued, but none of the provisions of this act shall apply to the redemption or exchange of any of the bonds issued to the Pacific railway companies; and the bonds so received and exchanged in pursuance of the provisions of this act shall be canceled and destroyed.

SEC. 3. Authority to issue bonds and notes to the amount necessary to carry out the provisions of this act is hereby granted.

SEC. 4. The act approved February 26, 1879, authorizing the issue of certificates of deposit is hereby amended so as to continue and limit the amount of certificates to be issued to $50,000,000 to be outstanding at any one time, and fixing the rate of interest to be allowed thereon at 3½ per cent. per annum for one year, after which interest shall cease; and the said certificates shall be convertible, at the option of the holders, when presented in sums of $50 or multiples thereof, into the coupon or registered bonds authorized by this act; and whenever any of the said certificates shall be converted into bonds, the same shall be canceled and destroyed; but the Secretary of the Treasury may, in his discretion, issue new certificates in place of those so converted up to the limit of $50,000,000, until the aggregate amount of the bonds authorized by this act and of the said certificates combined then outstanding shall equal the amount of bonds hereby authorized. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons to form combinations by which to procure said certificates of deposit authorized under this act, for purposes of sale to others, or for acting as agents of others, and any person so offending shall be liable, on conviction, to be fined $1,000 or imprisoned not to exceed one year. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make suitable regulations in compliance with this act, providing that the expense for the disposing of the certificates and bonds authorized to be issued shall not exceed ¼ of 1 per cent.: Provided, That said certificates shall not be sold or converted at less than par.

SEC. 5. From and after the 1st day of July, 1880, the 3½ per cent. bonds authorized by the first section of this act shall be the only bonds receivable as security for national-bank circulation.

SEC. 6. This act shall be known as "The funding act of 1880," and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. On behalf of the Committee of Ways and Means, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That House bill No. 3306, reported back by the Committee of Ways Means with a substitute, be committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and made a special order immediately after the morning hour on the first Tuesday in March, and from day to day until disposed of, to the exclusion of all existing orders, but not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CARLISLE submitted a request for leave to withdraw from the files of the Committee for the District of Columbia the memorial of citizens of the District asking for the passage of a law to enforce the satisfaction of judgments, there having been no adverse report; which request was referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. DE LA MATYR for ten days, on account of business.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair on behalf of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] asks unanimous consent that Mr. John C. Hervey, a citizen of Wheeling, West Virginia, be allowed the privilege of the floor during to-day.

There being no objection, the request was granted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair asks unanimous consent to lay before the House for reference certain executive communications.

There was no objection.

DIES AND MOLDS FOR COUNTERFEITING COIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, recommending legislation for the punishment of persons making or having in possession dies or molds for manufacturing counterfeit coin; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

POSTAGE FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting estimates of appropriations required for postage for that Department; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

IMPROVEMENT OF FLUSHING BAY, NEW YORK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the improvement of Flushing Bay, New York; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF ANACOSTIA RIVER, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, relative to the necessity for the improvement of the Anacostia River in front of the Washington navy-yard and the approaches thereto from Giesborough Point; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS-BANK.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a resolution of the Colored Men's Protective Union, of Savannah, Georgia, relative to the Freedman's Savings-Bank; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

LEAVENWORTH MILITARY PRISON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending an increase of the estimate of appropriation for the support of the Leavenworth military prison; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

TRAVEL AND ALLOWANCES, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to travel and allowances of officers and enlisted men in the United States Army; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SURVEY OF THE CONNECTICUT RIVER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a report of survey of the Connecticut River below Hartford; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MODE OF PURCHASING TOBACCO.

Mr. THOMAS, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the Cairo Tobacco Board of Trade and many citizens, touching the present mode of purchasing tobacco by the agents of certain foreign governments; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

It is as follows:

CAIRO, ILLINOIS, February 12, 1880.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, at Washington, District of Columbia:

The undersigned, your petitioners, officers and members of the Tobacco Board of Cairo, Illinois, and others interested in the purchase and sale of leaf-tobacco, would respectfully represent to your honorable body that a great injury and manifest injustice is being done to one of the largest agricultural interests in this country, and to every one interested in the purchase or sale of one of our great staples, produced in thirteen different States of this Union, and would humbly ask that such action be taken in the premises by your honorable body as may bring relief.

Your petitioners would show to your honorable body that from the article of leaf-tobacco the Government of the United States derives an annual revenue of about $41,000,000, which will serve to call your attention to the extent of its production in the States and the magnitude of the interests involved in its culture, sale, purchase, and manufacture. Your petitioners would respectfully represent to your honorable body that this immense interest is greatly injured and producers and dealers largely damaged by the legislation and commercial usage of certain foreign governments, from which your petitioners, for themselves and thousands of others, as dealers, and the hosts who are engaged in thirteen different States in this Union in the product of this great staple, pray relief.

Your petitioners would represent to your honorable body that in the countries of France, Spain, Italy, and Austria, in Europe, the importation and sale of this great staple of our country is made a government monopoly, and that in no other way than through this government monopoly is tobacco allowed to be imported into their dominions, and this to the great detriment of the thousands in this country interested as producers of or dealers therein, by depriving them of competition in the sale thereof.

France imports about $6,000,000 worth of leaf-tobacco per annum, upon which a profit of about $40,000,000 is realized, or about one-third of her entire revenue; and this is but an illustration of what is done in Spain, Italy, and Austria. Your petitioners recognize the fact that these great governments have not only the right to derive revenue from leaf-tobacco within their respective dominions, but also to provide the manner in which said revenue shall be raised; but your petitioners respectfully but earnestly protest that they have not the right to raise said revenue in such manner as to result in the great detriment and unparalleled injury of the thousands engaged in the production of this great staple to a large extent in thirteen different States of this Union, and to a limited extent in twenty or more other States of the Union, and the immense numbers interested as dealers in the same throughout the length and breadth of this land, by creating a close monopoly within their dominions, thereby excluding that healthy competition to which, by the laws of commerce, we are entitled, and which our interests demand.

Your petitioners would further represent to your honorable body that other countries in Europe, not to mention our own Government, derive immense revenue from leaf-tobacco, perhaps as great or greater than that of the four great powers named, but the same is raised in such manner (by taxation) as not to interfere with its importation into those dominions by any and all persons who may desire to engage therein, thus constituting what is termed open markets. We may cite in this connection the case of England, where the tax levied upon leaf-tobacco is about eighty-five cents per pound, and perhaps a greater revenue is raised than in France, Spain, Italy, or Austria, but hers is an "open" market, into which any person, native or foreign, may import; hence we are not deprived of that healthy competition so much to be desired in the sale of this and all other products of the country.

Your petitioners would further represent to your honorable body that these four great governments purchase in the United States every year an average of not less than twenty-five million pounds of leaf-tobacco each, making an aggregate of one hundred million or over, and these large purchases are made through agents called "regies," in such manner as to lower the value not only of the tobacco purchased for these governments, but the entire stock or products of the country, and to place it in the power of two or three men to fix the price of tobacco on all the markets of this country, and through our markets (the original source of supply) control the markets of the world. This your petitioners humbly protest is too great power over this immense interest to be placed in the hands of two or three men whose pecuniary interest demands the lowest price attainable.

Your petitioners would further represent to your honorable body that the purchases made by these agents or regies for their respective governments are made by advertising for contracts to furnish the quantities of tobacco required by their respective governments within a specified time.

These contracts are let to the lowest bidder; often one person secures the contract to furnish two or more of these governments, thus cutting off competition on these large amounts of tobacco by reducing the number of persons interested in these contracts, and placing it in the power of two or three contractors, by collusion or combination, to manipulate the prices on leaf-tobacco at all times, in such manner as may suit their own private interests. Your petitioners would further state that this large amount of leaf-tobacco before mentioned—over one hundred million pounds—as sold to these governments through the aforementioned agents or regies and contractors, must necessarily be sold to these governments, there being no other market or demand for the same. But if these monopolies are removed and these several countries made open markets to which all may ship who desire to do so, their respective governments may by taxation secure as great revenue as at present, and at the same time our people may have one hundred men buying their produce for importation to each one of the countries, where now they have but one. Your petitioners would further state that no other product of this or any other country, so far as they have been able to learn, is thus discriminated against. Your petitioners respectfully request, and earnestly demand, that as the markets of these United States are open to all citizens of the habitable globe, into which they may import any or all of their products, so in like manner, and upon like terms, these four great governments above named be required to open their markets to our tobacco, do away with their monopolies, and abate the great injury and damage being done our agricultural and commercial interests.

The facts and premises considered, your petitioners humbly pray that your honorable body will take cognizance of the grievance, and that such action may be had by your honorable body as may bring the greatest and most speedy relief to your petitioners and to the immense interest above referred to.

And as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

J. M. Phillips, president Tobacco Board of Trade; M. B. Riggins, W. M. Coffee, H. M. Bassinger, John Freeman, vice-presidents; W. M. Williams, secretary; R. H. Cunningham, I. H. McKinney, W. M. Powell, S. B. Penn, R. R. Wakefield, J. E. Henderson, Harve Hook, Robert Hinkle, Charles Hinkle, W. G. Scott, J. H. Moore, Jesse Hinkle, J. K. Williamson, George Snook, J. C. Smith, N. B. Thistlewood.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, General P. G. T. Beauregard, inspector-general of the State of Louisiana, was admitted to the privileges of the floor.

IMPORTED SUGAR.

Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4593) to secure the more uniform collection of duties on imported sugar; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

COMPLETION OF CUSTOM-HOUSE, NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. GIBSON also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4594) making an appropriation of $150,000 for the completion of the custom-house, New Orleans, Louisiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CORA A. SLOCUMB, AND OTHERS.

Mr. ELLIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4595) for the relief of Cora A. Slocumb, Ira A. Richardson, and Caroline A. Urquhart; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, announced the passage of the joint resolution (H. R. No. 200) for printing the eulogies delivered in the Senate and House of Representatives upon Hon. Rush Clark.

It further announced the passage of a joint resolution (S. No. 80) authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to transport contributions for the relief of the suffering poor of Ireland; in which concurrence was requested.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM STATE COURTS.

Mr. BURROWS. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, the morning hour now begins at twenty minutes past two o'clock p. m., and the House resumes the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, being the bill (H. R. No. 4219) to amend sections 1, 2, 3, and 10 of an act to determine the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, and to regulate the removal of causes from State courts, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1875. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] is speaking by unanimous consent to complete his remarks, which is construed to be for one hour.

Mr. KNOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the remarks which I had the honor to submit on yesterday in relation to the bill under discussion I dwelt at some length upon the doctrine announced by the Supreme Court in Letson's case, because it has furnished the ground and constituted the canon upon which the Federal courts have claimed jurisdiction in causes to which corporations have been parties from that time to the present, and which under the rule stare decisis they will probably continue to exercise until restrained by congressional action; although I am free to say, sir, that if it were an original question, I do not believe there are three judges of our present Supreme Court who would decide that any court of the United States could constitutionally claim any such authority, except in cases arising under the Constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, or within their admiralty or maritime jurisdiction. On the contrary, I think I am warranted in the belief that they would sincerely rejoice to be relieved entirely of a class of cases entailed upon them by the erroneous rulings of their predecessors, and involving at least four-fifths of the most difficult and perplexing labor they are called upon to perform.

The bill before us, however, sir, falls far short of such a desirable consummation. For one I would be glad if it went much further than it does. I would rejoice if it went to the extent of placing the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in all cases in which corporations are involved back upon its true constitutional basis. It does not go to that extent, however, and is not in any way inconsistent with the principle upon which the courts of the United States now claim to exercise such jurisdiction. It merely proposes, in that particular, that where a corporation shall see proper, either under the comity of nations or by special license, to carry on its business in other States than that by which it shall have been created, it shall, so far as the adjustment of its controversies with the citizens of those States is concerned, be placed precisely on the same footing as that occupied by citizens of the same State with respect to each other.

And, sir, if I had not heard the speeches of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BARBER] and my esteemed friend and colleague from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] I would have said that no reasonably fair-minded man could urge any possible objection whatever to such a proposition; for I do not believe that there is a solitary gentleman on this floor who would so far stultify his own constituency, or so far disparage the ability or integrity of his own State tribunals, as to insinuate that they lack either the capacity or the disposition to administer even-handed justice even in a case in which a foreign corporation might be a party; and certainly there can be nothing unjust or unfair in requiring a corporation to submit its rights to the arbitrament of the same tribunals to which the citizens with whom it transacts its business are obliged to resort in controversies between themselves, especially when unnecessary expense may be thus avoided, delays obviated, and other hardships prevented.

The gentleman from Illinois, however, made a special exception of the Pacific railroad companies, and earnestly appealed to me in his speech for an opinion as to the propriety of turning them over to the local tribunals of the States through which their lines of road extend. But why they should be singled out from all the other corporations in the United States I confess I am somewhat at a loss to understand; but possibly the gentleman's nervous solicitude for the welfare of those feeble and unprotected institutions may be accounted for upon the hypothesis that they have been too grossly neglected by the Government already.

It is true they have received through the munificence of Congressional bounty enough of the public domain to make an empire three or four times as large as the magnificent State which the gentleman so ably represents; it is true they have been the recipients of a loan of over $60,000,000, upon which the tax-payers of this country have been paying the interest for years; it is true they are permitted to charge the most exorbitant rates of fare and freight, and to make the most unjust and despotic discriminations among connecting lines; and it may be true, as the gentleman says, that they are the great channels of trade for six hundred millions of people—though I hardly think they are myself; but how can such pitiful benefactions and petty privileges as these compensate for the horrible atrocity of allowing these defenseless creatures to be sued in a State court? God forbid that such an outrage should be seriously contemplated by an American Congress! No, sir. If through the negligence of their employés an unfortunate citizen should be maimed for life, or his wife and children mangled to death, or the dwelling burned from over their heads, and he should dare to seek redress for the injuries thus inflicted upon him, let him be dragged hundreds of miles away to a Federal court, where he cannot procure the attendance of his witnesses, where he will be ruined by expense and harassed by delays until he is compelled to compromise his suit or abandon it in despair.

But I think, sir, that the gentleman was unduly excited when he expressed the opinion that the bill in its other aspects "is a manifest discrimination in favor of the rich man and against the poor." I can hardly believe, Mr. Speaker, that there is any great number of poor men in this country who are languishing for the luxury of being sued in the Federal courts, and I know as a general rule they are not those who seek redress of their grievances in those tribunals. There are not many of them money-lenders or "money-sharks," and their business transactions do not usually extend beyond the borders of their own States or involve controversies that they are unwilling to have settled in the State courts. At any rate, I think if the gentleman will look the matter over in a calm and dispassionate frame of mind he will be satisfied that there is no reason to apprehend an immediate insurrection among the poorer classes on account of any exclusive privileges secured to the bloated bondholder by any provision in this bill.

Now, sir, as to the constitutionality of the limitation here proposed upon the jurisdiction of the circuit courts in cases to which corporations are parties, I had supposed that no gentleman who had given the subject even a cursory examination could entertain a rational doubt. It was, therefore, with mingled feelings of surprise and regret that I listened to the remarks of my learned colleague from Massachusetts upon that feature of the bill; for I not only esteem him as one of the most candid and conscientious gentlemen I ever met, but consider him one of the ablest and most accurate lawyers on this floor, or within my entire acquaintance, and I am satisfied that if he will review his position upon this question he will be convinced of the errors into which I think he has inadvertently fallen.

He will find, I think, sir, that he has made a total misapplication of the cases of Martin vs. Hunter, (1 Wheaton,) and Cohen vs. Virginia, (6 Wheaton,) and that the principle there determined has no relevancy whatever to the question under consideration. The jurisdiction of circuit courts or other inferior tribunals was not involved in either of them, directly or remotely; nor was the power of Congress to limit the jurisdiction of any inferior court it might ordain or establish legitimately before the court or necessary to be considered at all. The court, therefore, could not have decided and did not undertake to determine any such question in either of those cases. The question in both was whether the twenty-fifth section of the judiciary act of 1798, which purported to authorize the Supreme Court of the United States to exercise appellate jurisdiction by writ of error to the highest courts of law and equity in the several States in certain cases and under the circumstances therein specified, was within the constitutional powers of the Congress by which it was enacted. It was not whether Congress, even in that instance, had gone, or was obliged to go, to the utmost limit of its constitutional authority, but whether it had the power to go as far as it had gone. The remarks of Judge Story which the gentleman quoted as sustaining his view of the question under discussion were therefore mere obiter dicta, and no more entitled to be considered as authority, here or elsewhere, than the opinion of the gentleman himself, and in my estimation not half so much so.

Nor does it seem to me, sir, that my learned friend was much more fortunate in his citation of the case of the Insurance Company vs. Morse, (20 Wallace, 445.) The question in that case was not what Congress could or could not constitutionally do, but whether an agreement entered into by a corporation in pursuance of an act of a State Legislature could oust the circuit courts of the United States of a jurisdiction which Congress had conferred upon them; and if the gentleman will re-examine the text of that decision he will find no intimation in it anywhere that Congress has not the authority to limit the jurisdiction of any inferior tribunal it is authorized to establish, in any manner or to any extent whatever, either as to person or subject-matter. On the contrary, he will find that, after quoting the clause of the Constitution extending the judicial power of the United States to controversies between citizens of different States, the court proceeds to say:

> The jurisdiction of the Federal courts under this clause of the Constitution depends upon and is regulated by the laws of the United States. State Legislatures cannot confer jurisdiction upon Federal courts, nor can it limit or restrict the authority given by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution.

He will thus see, sir, that Congress confers upon the courts of its own creation especially the authority by which they act, and without which in any given case they could do nothing; and it follows as an inevitable consequence that Congress may withhold so much of the power which it has the constitutional authority to confer upon the courts as it may see proper. The power of withholding is indeed but the necessary correlative of the power of conferring, and both are but the natural and inseparable incidents of the power to create.

If this is not true, sir, it must follow that whenever Congress creates an inferior court it is eo instanti invested with the whole judicial power of the United States, except so much thereof as is conferred exclusively upon the Supreme Court by the Constitution, a principle which no Department has ever dreamed of asserting from the date of its organization to the present moment. On the contrary, they have uniformly recognized and acted upon the principle that, while the Constitution has defined the limits of the judicial power of the United States, it has nowhere prescribed how much of it shall be exercised by their inferior courts, and consequently that Congress has the power to place what restrictions it may see proper upon the tribunals which it alone has the power to create.

The power to thus limit the jurisdiction of the courts established by it was clearly recognized by the first Congress which assembled under the Constitution in the passage of the judiciary act of 1789, and by President Washington, who approved it. The provisions of that act not only limited the jurisdiction of the circuit courts as to the amount necessary to be involved, but withheld from them a vast range of cases which might have been brought constitutionally within their cognizance, and the Supreme Court has invariably held that those courts could not exercise jurisdiction in any case unless such authority had been expressly conferred by act of Congress, and that, too, in cases arising directly under the laws of the United States, notwithstanding the Constitution distinctly provides that the judicial power shall extend to all such cases.

Take, for example, sir, the proceeding by mandamus, which might have been constitutionally extended to a vast variety of cases arising under the Constitution, laws, and treaties of the United States, or controversies between citizens of different States, but which, by the terms of the judiciary act, was confined exclusively, so far as the circuit courts were concerned, to certain cases in which it was necessary to the exercise of their other jurisdiction. Under this state of the law the case of McIntire against Wood came before the Supreme Court upon a division of opinion from the circuit court for the district of Ohio on a motion for a mandamus to compel the register of the land office at Marietta to grant the plaintiff final certificates of purchase of certain lands to which he supposed himself entitled under the laws of the United States; and in that case (7 Cranch, 506) the Supreme Court—Chief-Justice Marshall and Judge Story both sitting—declared, without a dissenting voice, that the circuit court had no authority to issue the writ.

The court said:

> Independent of the particular objections which this case presents from its involving a question of freehold, we are of opinion that the power of the circuit courts to issue the writ of mandamus is confined exclusively to those cases in which it may be necessary to the exercise of their jurisdiction. Had the eleventh section of the judiciary act covered the whole ground of the Constitution, there would be much reason for exercising this power in many cases wherein some ministerial act is necessary to the completion of an individual right arising under laws of the United States, and the fourteenth section of the same act would sanction the issuing of the writ for such a purpose. But although the judicial power of the United States extends to cases arising under the laws of the United States, the Legislature have not thought proper to delegate the exercise of that power to its circuit courts except in certain specified cases. When questions arise under those laws in the State courts, and the party who claims a right or privilege under them is unsuccessful, an appeal is given to the supreme court, and this provision the Legislature has thought sufficient at present for all the political purposes intended to be answered by the clause of the Constitution which relates to this subject.

But again, sir, the eleventh section of the judiciary act of 1789, defining the jurisdiction of circuit courts, expressly restrains them from taking cognizance of any suit to recover the contents of any promissory note or other chose in action in favor of an assignee unless a suit might have been prosecuted in such court to recover the contents if no assignment had been made, except in cases of foreign bills of exchange. This limitation the gentleman from Massachusetts admits to be constitutional, and is anxious, as I understand him, to see it reinstated in the law. But, sir, in making that admission, it seems to me he has completely answered his entire argument on this point.

The constitutionality of this clause was directly attacked in the case of Turner vs. The Bank of North America, (4 Dallas, 10,) and that, too, upon the identical ground taken by the gentleman in opposition to the provision now under discussion. It was contended in that case that as the controversy was one between citizens of different States the Constitution gave the plaintiff the right to sue in the circuit court of the United States, notwithstanding he was an assignee and within the restriction prescribed in the eleventh section of the judiciary act. In other words, that the restriction was unconstitutional and void because it took away the right of citizens to sue in the Federal courts in certain cases, which right had been guaranteed to them by the Constitution itself. The court, however, through Chief-Justice Ellsworth, who was the author of the judiciary act, unanimously held the clause to be strictly consonant with the Constitution. It will not do for the gentleman to say that this case is not in point, for as I have said the precise question he makes here was there brought directly before the court and had to be determined; and the presentation of such an argument seems to have excited as much astonishment in the mind of the court then as its resurrection here creates in my own. When it was urged by Mr. Rawle in that case Chief-Justice Ellsworth was led to exclaim from the bench with some show of impatience:

> How far is it meant to carry this argument? Will it be affirmed that in every case to which the judicial power of the United States extends the Federal courts may exercise a jurisdiction without the intervention of the Legislature to distribute and regulate the power?

And Mr. Justice Chase also immediately responded:

> The notion has frequently been entertained that the Federal courts derive their judicial power directly from the Constitution, but the political truth is that the disposal of the judicial power (except in a few specified instances) belongs to Congress. If Congress has given the power to this court, we possess it—not otherwise; and if Congress has not given the power to us or to any other court, it still remains at the legislative disposal. Besides, Congress is not bound, and it would, perhaps, be inexpedient, to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal courts to every subject, in every form which the Constitution might warrant.

But, sir, the constitutionality of this same restriction was again brought directly in question before the Supreme Court in 1839 in the case of Sheldon vs. Sill, (8 Howard, 448,) and the same objection which the gentleman makes to this bill reargued with great earnestness and force, but the court, speaking through Mr. Justice Grier, answered it fully, as follows:

> The second section of the same article enumerates the cases and controversies of which the judicial power shall have cognizance, and, among others, it specifies "controversies between citizens of different States."
> It has been alleged that this restriction of the judiciary act with regard to assignees of choses in action is in conflict with this provision of the Constitution, and therefore void.

It must be admitted that if the Constitution had ordained and established the inferior courts, and distributed to them their respective powers, they could not be restricted or divested by Congress. But as it has made no such distribution, one or two consequences must result, either that each inferior court created by Congress must exercise all the judicial powers not given to the Supreme Court, or that Congress, having the power to establish the courts, must define their respective jurisdictions. The first of these inferences has never been asserted, and could not be defended with any show of reason, and if not, the latter would seem to follow as a necessary consequence. And it would seem to follow also, that, having a right to prescribe, Congress may withhold from any court of its creation jurisdiction of any of the enumerated controversies. Courts created by statute can have no jurisdiction but such as the statute confers. No one of them can assert a just claim to jurisdiction exclusively conferred on another or withheld from all.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that these cases ought to be taken as a sufficient answer to the argument of my learned friend from Massachusetts, as well as to the dicta of Judge Story upon which it was based. In fact, the gentleman seems to be laboring under a total and, to my mind, an unaccountable misapprehension of the principle involved in the provision to which he appears to be so vehemently opposed. It makes no discrimination between citizens of different States, nor among citizens of the same State, but relates exclusively to circumstances entirely within the volition of the parties which may be affected by it. No man need come within its purview unless by his own choice. The principle upon which it proceeds is in fact identical in every particular with that involved in the provision of the eleventh section of the old judiciary act which the gentleman so cordially approves and desires to see revived.

In that case Congress said in effect to every citizen of every State in the Union, if you become the owner by assignment of a promissory note or other chose in action, except a foreign bill of exchange, you shall take precisely the place of your assignor; if he could not have sued in the Federal courts upon that obligation before assignment, neither shall you, although you may be a citizen of a different State from that of the obligor or payer.

In this it says to the same citizens, whether of Kentucky or Massachusetts or elsewhere in the Union, without regard to age, sex, nationality, color, or previous condition of servitude, if you are a member of a body-corporate, and that body shall see proper to go beyond the limits of the State which created it, and carry on its business within the limits of another sovereignty, it shall, so long as that condition exists, be regarded by the courts of the United States precisely as a citizen of that sovereignty in all controversies between itself and the citizens of the State of whose comity or license it may thus avail itself for its own profit and aggrandizement.

There is the whole matter, sir. There is nothing either sectional or partisan in it or in any other feature of the bill. It endangers the citizenship of no one on any account or for any reason whatever. It imperils the dignity or welfare of no State. It is no impeachment of the integrity of the Federal judiciary in any of its branches. It is no encroachment upon any of the powers of the General Government. It does not even seek to overrule the doctrine of the Supreme Court in relation to the citizenship of a corporation, nor take away the assumed jurisdiction of the Federal courts in cases where such institutions sue or are sued by a citizen of a State in which they are not engaged in the business authorized by their charters. It has been over and over again recognized by the highest tribunal known to our laws as in strict conformity to the Constitution, and is intended to relieve the courts of the United States, as well as the suitors and litigants before them, of many unnecessary and frequently intolerable hardships.

I trust, therefore, sir, that the bill with the amendment offered by my valued friend from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] will be passed, and I trust my friend from Massachusetts will pardon me if I repeat that I was surprised at his argument, which I am satisfied was not considered with the accuracy and care for which he is so justly distinguished, and will permit me to add that I especially regret his allusion to the case of Scott against Sanford. Not that I have now or ever had any particular feeling in relation to it one way or another, but because it happily belongs to the débris of the past, and it was impossible for me to conceive how it could have any relevancy to the matter under discussion. For that reason I do not care to discuss that case here, but my friend will permit me to suggest that in my judgment it simply shows an honest difference of opinion between himself and the majority of the court by which it was decided. He thinks that Dred Scott was a citizen, and that the court made an unjust discrimination against him. They thought that under the law as it then stood he was not and could not be. Which opinion is correct it is at this time fortunately immaterial to inquire. Two-thirds of each House of Congress, and the Legislatures of three-fourths of the States, possibly suspected that the court was right after all, and therefore passed the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution in order that the question might be settled forever.

I regret moreover, sir, that my friend dwelt with so much fervor upon the possible hardships which might result to savings-banks and such corporations as might be the holders of the bonds issued by the municipalities in the Western States should this provision of the bill become a law, for a moment's reflection would have satisfied him that the evils which seemed to give him so much concern could but rarely if ever occur. Savings-banks as a general rule, I believe, lend their money over their own counters, and if one of them ever had a branch doing business in any other State than the one by which it was chartered, I never heard of it. And the same is true of the corporations which deal in the municipal obligations of other States; but if either of these classes of corporations should see proper to place themselves within the purview of this bill with a full knowledge of its effects, I see no reason why they should complain or why an exception should be made in their favor. If they do not, this provision in the law would not change their present rights or liabilities a particle.

In conclusion, sir, I feel constrained to acknowledge my profoundest thanks to the House for its patient and courteous attention to the remarks I have had the honor to submit.

Mr. HURD. Mr. Speaker, this bill has been discussed at so much length that I do not propose to detain the House long now. The bill, as is well understood by all members who have paid attention to the discussion, proposes to change the law as to the removal of causes from State courts to the circuit courts of the United States. These changes are fourfold. First, it is proposed that no causes shall be removed unless the amount involved in them equals or exceeds the sum of $2,000; secondly, that under no circumstances shall the plaintiff in the action in the State courts remove the cause; thirdly, that neither shall the defendant, excepting before he has entered his appearance; and, fourthly, that foreign corporations shall be regarded as citizens of the State in which the action may be brought. The effect of the latter proposition is to exclude private corporations created under the authority of one State from maintaining action or being sued in another State in which they do business as foreign corporations.

The first and second propositions—that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant, after issue joined, shall have the right to remove the cause—seem to meet with general approval; and this, Mr. Speaker, upon the very manifest ground that when the jurisdiction of the State court has been voluntarily invoked by the party he shall remain there until that jurisdiction has been exhausted.

To the other two provisions one objection has been made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBINSON] to which I desire to call the attention of the House. Both of them are inserted in the bill in the exercise of what is believed to be a power possessed by Congress to distribute jurisdiction in the creation of Federal courts.

The gentleman objects because he says where Federal courts have been created, the rights of the parties described in the judicial article of the Constitution to sue and be sued in them become vested, so that there can be no divesting of such rights by act of Congress, no discrimination in favor of or against a class of citizens. In other words, that the whole judicial power, except that of the Supreme Court, of the Constitution is vested in every tribunal of the United States which is created for judicial purposes. It seems to me that this is the conclusion to which the gentleman's proposition leads.

Mr. Speaker, it has been settled, so far as legislative construction can settle it, from 1798, that Congress in creating the courts can determine the citizens or classes who may go into them. In the first act upon this subject it was provided that citizens who had suits involving a less sum than $500 could not remove them from the State courts into the United States court. It was provided that citizens who were assignees of choses at action in certain cases could not remove their causes, and that the right of removal could not be exercised except in a case where the suit was brought by an alien or a citizen of the State in which the court was held against the citizen of another State.

As has been said by the chairman of the Judiciary Committee in his able discussion of this subject, the power of Congress to pass such a law has been brought on several occasions to the attention of the Supreme Court of the United States, and in those instances in which the power was doubted or denied that tribunal held that it was properly exercised.

But, in the second place, let us look to the Constitution itself. In the dictum which the gentleman quotes from the case in 1 Wheaton it would seem that the power to create courts of the United States inferior to the Supreme Court was vested in the Congress by the provision of the judiciary section. That is not true, Mr. Speaker. It is conferred upon Congress by the provision of the Constitution which relates to legislative power, and there, in section 8, article 1, it is declared that the Congress shall have power to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court. The power to constitute these tribunals, therefore, is a legislative one, to be exercised as any other, in the discretion of Congress. In this view Congress may determine who shall be the parties with the right to sue and be sued in these inferior tribunals, what classes of citizens may be permitted to use them, and in every way regulate and decide the methods of procedure in them.

In the third place, the judiciary clause itself, to which the gentleman refers, it seems to me, clearly indicates that the whole discretion over this question is in the Congress of the United States. The first part of section 2 of article 3 of the Constitution says:

The judicial power shall extend to all cases, in law and equity, arising under this Constitution, the laws of the United States, and treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority.

In the latter clause of the same section it is provided:

To controversies to which the United States shall be a party;—to controversies between two or more States;—between citizens of the same State, &c.

The point to which I wish to call the attention of the House particularly in this connection is this: that the judicial power, in the first part of this section, is said to extend to all cases in law and equity arising under the Constitution; but when it comes to the latter part of the section, it provides that the judicial power shall extend to "controversies" between citizens of the different States. In the first part it is to all cases, so that when the courts are created the jurisdiction in "all cases" must be conferred. But in the second part it is to "controversies"—not all controversies. What controversies? Such, manifestly, as the Congress of the United States may declare the tribunal it creates shall take jurisdiction of.

I answer, therefore, the argument of the gentleman from Massachusetts by saying that, in the first place, the legislative construction from the beginning of the Government has declared that Congress has the power to make these discriminations, and exclude such classes of citizens as it may determine ought to be excluded from the inferior courts it creates. Secondly, the power to establish these tribunals, inferior to the Supreme Court, is a legislative power, created by that article of the constitution which confers authority upon Congress, and that the power, therefore, is in Congress to be exercised legislatively in its discretion; and that persons, or corporations, or classes of citizens, may be excluded from such tribunals as it may provide. Thirdly, the judicial article itself makes distinction between the judicial power extending to all cases arising under the Constitution of the United States and to controversies existing between citizens of different States. In the one case the whole field of jurisdiction is covered; in the other, only such part of it as the legislation of Congress sees fit to occupy.

Mr. Speaker, this bill does not go far enough for me. I would gladly return to the old judiciary act of 1798. I would gladly change the law so as to prevent the removal of many causes to the circuit court which will still be taken from the State courts under the provisions of this bill. But I see there is immediate necessity for action.

The people all through the United States are complaining because they are dragged from the State courts by this power of removal to the United States courts at great expense. The Supreme Court of the United States is complaining because it cannot dispose of the causes upon the docket. The judges are now more than three years behind. And both these facts amount in very many cases to the practical denial of justice to suitors and litigants. In order, therefore, to remedy the pressing evils I am willing to abate very much of my demands in this direction; and I consent to this bill in its present form that these parties who complain so much may find at once, though only in part, the relief they have the right to demand from Congress.

Mr. HERBERT addressed the House. Before he had finished his remarks, [which will be found in full on page 1010,]

Mr. HAYES said: Has not the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. HAYES. Then I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the report of the Committee on Rules.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole,

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CHITTENDEN, for four days from February 18; and

To Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey, for three days.

DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia, with amendments by the Senate.

There being no objection, the resolution (H. R. No. 203) was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 9, after the word "week," insert "from and after the 1st day of July, 1879."

Strike out all after the word "made," in line 12, and insert:

"For the present fiscal year, one-half of said expense to be paid by the United States and one-half by the District of Columbia, as provided by the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, providing a permanent form of government for said District."

So as to make the resolution read:

"That to enable the commissioners of the District of Columbia to carry into effect the act approved March 3, 1879, which continues in force the thirteenth section of the act revising and amending the various acts establishing and relating to the Reform School of the District of Columbia, approved May 3, 1876, they be, and are hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the board of trustees of said Reform School of the District of Columbia the $2 per week from and after the 1st day of July, 1879, for each boy committed thereto, as provided by said thirteenth section of the act of May 3, 1876, aforesaid, and the necessary appropriation therefor is hereby made for the present fiscal year, one-half of said expense to be paid by the United States and one-half by the District of Columbia, as provided by the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, providing a permanent form of government for said District."

Mr. HUNTON. I move that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

The motion was agreed to; and the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FORNEY. I move that the House agree to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. FORNEY of Alabama, Mr. BLOUNT of Georgia, and Mr. CANNON of Illinois.

ADDITIONAL CLERKS FOR PENSION CASES.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 3258) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of War to employ additional clerks for the balance of this fiscal year to expedite the settlement of pension applications, and for other purposes, with amendments by the Senate.

Mr. REAGAN. If that leads to debate I shall object. I desire that we shall go on with the report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object to it any way.

Mr. COFFROTH. I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] does not insist on his objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do so unconditionally.

SURVEY IN CRAWFORD COUNTY, WISCONSIN.

Mr. HAZELTON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4596) authorizing the survey of parts of certain townships in Crawford County, Wisconsin, and making an appropriation therefor; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOOKER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. REAGAN. Oh, no.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 84, noes 65.

Mr. SPARKS. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. SPARKS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 91, noes 46.

Before the result of this vote was announced,

Mr. CONGER called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, there being 40 in the affirmative; more than one-fifth of the last vote.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 112, nays 96, not voting 84; as follows:

YEAS—112.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 19, 1880.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. J. BULLOCK, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, communicating, in answer to a resolution of the 22d ultimo, information concerning land-grant railroad companies that have not performed the conditions of their grants.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That subject, by order of the Senate, is now under consideration by the Committee on the Judiciary. I do not see the chairman of the committee here. I think the communication should go to that committee, and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be printed and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EATON presented the petition of J. B. Hardenbergh, of North Canaan, Connecticut, and Alfred P. Grint, of Hartford, Connecticut, praying for the passage of a law placing straw pulp and other chemicals used in the manufacture of paper on the free list, and to reduce the duty on printing paper; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. EATON. I have received in my official capacity a resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York in reference to the Japanese indemnity fund. I beg that it may be received and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The memorial will be received and so referred.

Mr. FERRY presented a resolution of the board of directors of the Chicago Board of Trade, in favor of an appropriation by Congress for the completion of the Saint Mary's Falls Canal and the deepening of the Detroit River at the Lime Kiln crossing in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented the memorial of John M. Hughes and others, citizens of Missouri and soldiers in the late war, remonstrating against the passage of the bill (S. No. 496) for the examination and adjudication of pension claims; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WHYTE presented resolutions of the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore, urging the passage of a law for the prevention of the adulteration of food; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore, in favor of the passage of the bill of the House of Representatives in regard to the establishment of a marine hospital in or near Baltimore City; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Trade of the city of Baltimore, favoring the passage of a law creating a commission to consider the proper form of a bankrupt law to be presented for the deliberation of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KERNAN presented the memorial of Tabbri & Chauncey and others, citizens of New York, remonstrating against the passage of the bill for the further distribution of the Geneva award, and favoring an amendment thereof providing for payment of war-premium claims and those for vessels and cargoes uninsured against war risks; which was ordered to lie upon the table.

Mr. COKE presented a petition of citizens of Williamson, Texas, and a petition of citizens of Milam, Texas, praying such an amendment of the patent laws as will protect innocent users of patented articles from prosecution as infringers; which were referred to the Committee on Patents.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Williamson, Texas, and a petition of citizens of Milam, Texas, praying for such legislation as will prevent fluctuations in freights and unjust discriminations in charges for transportation; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I present a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, in which it is recited that the Reagan bill (H. R. No. 1028) now before the House of Representatives is as a whole just and reasonable, and, with amendments looking to the protection of small shippers and shippers by lines of transportation running in part through foreign countries and providing for the appointment of three commissioners, that bill will best answer the requirements of the commerce of the country. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Philo B. Cady and others, citizens of Kansas and Pennsylvania and soldiers in the late war, praying for the passage of a law for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ALLISON presented the memorial of A. B. Stone, president of the Saint Louis, Keokuk and Northwestern Railroad Company, representing one hundred and thirty-five miles of railroad, remonstrating against a reduction of the duty on steel rails; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of citizens of Emporia, Kansas, soldiers in the late war, praying that they may be paid the difference between the value of gold and greenbacks at the time they were paid as such soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. TELLER presented resolutions of a convention of citizens of Colorado, praying an appropriation of $5,000 for the State Agricultural College of Colorado for the erection of buildings and the purchase of suitable machinery for a small sugar refinery; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GROOME presented the petition of A. W. Evans, major Third Cavalry, United States Army, praying for the passage of an act authorizing the President to nominate and, by and with the advice of the Senate, recommission the petitioner a major of cavalry of date December 20, 1866, instead of his present date of May 10, 1867; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING presented the petition of Arnold, Constable & Co. and other leading firms of New York, praying for the passage of a national bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Henry D. Payne and others, citizens of New York and soldiers and sailors of the volunteer forces of the United States, praying for the passage of a law providing for the equalization of bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a petition signed by Henry D. Payne and a large number of other citizens who were soldiers and sailors for the Union in the last war, remonstrating strongly against the passage of the bill proposing to create sixty pension districts with examinations to take place in those respective districts. I move its reference to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FERRY, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 16) for the relief of Albert Towle, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 259) for the relief of Reuben H. Plass, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. BURNSIDE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. R. No. 81) to make the 23d of February, 1880, a legal holiday in the District of Columbia; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

DEPARTMENT EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the heads of the Executive Departments who have not already submitted such report be directed to make to Congress at as early a date as practicable the annual report required by section 194, title 4, of the Revised Statutes, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 194. The head of each Department shall make an annual report to Congress of the names of the clerks and other persons that have been employed in his Department and the offices thereof; stating the time that each clerk or other person was actually employed, and the sums paid to each; also, whether they have been usefully employed; whether the services of any of them can be dispensed with without detriment to the public service, and whether the removal of any individuals, and the appointment of others in their stead, is required for the better dispatch of business."

DISTRICT POLICE FORCE.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to call up the resolution introduced by me yesterday calling for certain information from the commissioners of the District of Columbia, which went over under the rules.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted by Mr. BLAIR on the 18th instant:

Whereas by section 354 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, it is provided that no person shall be appointed as policeman or watchman in said District who has not served in the Army or Navy of the United States and received an honorable discharge; and

Whereas it is alleged that said statute has been and is now being violated, and that persons are now serving by appointment as such policemen and watchmen who never served in the Army or Navy of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to furnish for the use of the Senate a full and specific statement of the name, age, place of nativity, and date of appointment of each policeman and watchman belonging to the police force of this District; also, of the service of each in the Army or Navy of the United States, and whether honorably discharged therefrom; also, whether any other, and, if so, what other, military or naval service has been performed by each person on the police force, and whether any person has been at any time within two years last past appointed who has not served in the Army or Navy, and, if so, the reasons for such violation of law and the names of all persons so appointed.

Mr. WHYTE. Does it require a majority vote to take up this resolution for present consideration?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It does not. The resolution comes up of right, under the rule, having been introduced yesterday.

Mr. WHYTE. I move its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR. Before the question is taken upon that motion I should like to say to the Senate that this is a simple resolution calling for information which will be of as much advantage to the Senate at large as to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The law at present provides—and it has been the law since the year 1867—that the policemen and watchmen appointed in the District of Columbia shall be men who have served in the Army or Navy of the United States, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom. The terms of the law are imperative, not allowing of any discretionary action whatever on the part of the commissioners who administer the law.

It is alleged by various responsible persons who have made their allegations known to me, that this law is being and has been for a considerable time violated. By the resolution it is simply sought to ascertain the fact whether the law is being violated, and, if so, the causes of such violation. It is a call for information; and I cannot conceive that any public purpose will be promoted by sending a resolution of this kind to a committee for consideration. When the information shall have been received, its reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia may be very appropriate, but the information may be of such a character that no occasion whatever will arise for the consideration of the subject-matter by a committee. Its reference as now proposed can result in nothing but simply delay.

Mr. CONKLING. I feel moved to add one word to what has been said so properly, as I think, by the Senator from New Hampshire. Not only is this a mere call for information, but it is a call addressed to the commissioners themselves, committing it to them to say what they have done. That is a very kindly and harmless call. If it was to inquire of somebody else touching something which might reflect upon them, there might possibly be a reason for saying that it should undergo the scrutiny of a committee beforehand; but the proposition is simply to ask of these gentlemen themselves what is the condition of things in this regard.

I cannot think of any motive for referring the resolution to a committee, unless the object is to stifle the inquiry. I think it has never been the habit of the majority of the Senate, of whatever complexion that majority might be, since I have had the honor to serve here, to refuse information upon the call of a member of the minority. I know nothing about the facts myself. If it be untrue that the commissioners have violated the statutes, certainly they ought to be allowed to say so. If, on the contrary, that be true, then for other reasons the inquiry is proper.

Having myself disclaimed all knowledge on this subject, feeling no interest in it of any special character, I submit to the Senate that it will hardly do to refuse to allow an inquiry to be addressed to officers themselves inviting them to make answer. If that be not an appropriate species of inquiry, I do not know what would be deemed appropriate.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to read the section of the law referred to in the resolution. Section 354 of the statutes relating to the District of Columbia provides that—

> No person shall be appointed to office, or hold office in the police force, who cannot read and write the English language, or who is not a citizen of the United States, or who shall ever have been indicted and convicted of crime; and no person shall be appointed as policeman or watchman who has not served in the Army or Navy of the United States and received an honorable discharge.

It is alleged that this statute has been violated by the commissioners in their administration, and for the Senate to take a step which looks like stifling the inquiry would involve us, as it seems to me, by implication, in a participation in such violation of the law, if it exists. It seems to me that the commissioners, called upon in this way to give us the information which may entirely exonerate them, ought not themselves to be subjected to such a delay as might result from the reference of the resolution to a committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maryland to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the resolution?

The resolution was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the motion entered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] to reconsider the vote by which the resolution creating a special committee on the interoceanic canal was passed.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think we had better go on with the Calendar and postpone the consideration of that motion until half past one o'clock. The Calendar has no chance whatever in the Senate, unless in the brief time allowed between the close of the morning business and half past one o'clock.

Mr. GORDON. The trouble about it is that at half past one o'clock the unfinished business of yesterday takes precedence.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senator who has charge of that will doubtless give way for the motion of the Senator from West Virginia to be considered. I think we had better go on with the Calendar.

Mr. LOGAN. I see that the Senator who has charge of the bill, which is the unfinished business, is not in his seat, and I venture to say for him that the friends of that bill will not give way to any other business until its consideration is concluded; so that this matter had better proceed now.

Mr. ANTHONY. I appeal to Senators to stand by the Calendar. We have an order that gives us from half an hour to an hour every morning for the Calendar, and it is the only chance the Calendar has.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia to proceed to the consideration of the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution referred to was passed.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 26, noes 13.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GORDON. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia, who will make some remarks upon the subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I entered the motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed for several reasons; first, because the resolution had passed as I believed without the general knowledge of the Senate. It was passed during the morning hour, having been read simply from the desk, and very few of the Senators were aware of the importance of the resolution.

The resolution provides, as will be seen, for the employment of a clerk. I believe the Senator from Georgia is the only Senator who has referred in any way to that as being the cause of the objection urged by me to the resolution. He certainly was mistaken in that statement. I had no thought at that time of the expense to be incurred by the employment of a clerk, but my idea in a general way was that the resolution would lead to a very large expenditure in the end. It will be noticed that in the close of my remarks I suggested to the Senator from Georgia whether a standing committee could not take the subject into consideration, as in the end it would cost the country a great deal.

We have several rules by which this resolution ought to have had more than one reading or a fuller consideration. For instance, if it had provided for the payment of a clerk, the resolution would have been sent to the Committee on the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and it would have been read three times, in which case the attention of the Senate would have been called to the resolution fully.

But those are minor considerations in connection with the main subject. My impression was then and is now that we have committees enough, and that the matter should be referred to some standing committee—to the Committee on Commerce, for instance—of which the Senator from Georgia is chairman, and to whom the joint resolution introduced by that Senator was referred, and where it has remained for over sixty days. I do not know what action has been taken on that resolution by the committee, but my idea was then that the committee which had the subject under consideration ought to continue with it. It certainly is a proper subject for the consideration of that committee, which is composed of Senators from all parts of the country. The Senator from Georgia is chairman of that committee, and the other members are Mr. RANSOM, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. HEREFORD, Mr. COKE, Mr. CONKLING, Mr. MCMILLAN, Mr. JONES of Nevada, and Mr. BALDWIN. That committee is composed of representatives from all sections of the country; the eastern and western parts of the country as well as the Pacific slope are represented on it; and I saw no good reason why the reference should be changed from the committee that then had the subject under consideration. If the reference should be changed and if a new committee were to take hold of the subject, I was of the opinion, and am yet, that the Committee on Foreign Relations is the proper committee. It is a question in my mind that belongs to that committee probably more than to any other committee in the Senate. Questions are now before the country and probably before the Departments relating to this subject that necessarily belong to the Committee on Foreign Relations. In fact, this subject cannot be discussed properly on its merits without closing the doors. I believed then as I do now, that it is a subject that had better remain with the Committee on Commerce, which has it already in charge; or if a change of reference is to take place, it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope my friend from Georgia will consent to that course. I see nothing special to be accomplished by raising a new committee.

I will say, as the question of a clerk was referred to by the Senator from Georgia, not by myself, for I had no thought of the expense of the employment of a clerk at the time, that the clerk is only the beginning of the expense. In my judgment, if a special committee is raised, and perhaps otherwise, a hundred thousand dollars would not be too much to put down as the expense that would be incurred. Therefore I think we ought to go slowly; that we ought to be cautious, and take time and look into the matter very carefully before we move.

The original joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Georgia, I believe, calls upon the United States to protect any foreign or home company to the full extent of the power of this Government. I think that is the purport of the original resolution. I have it not before me, but the Senator from Georgia will correct me if I am wrong. If this Government were to make any such declaration as that it would be almost equivalent to a war at once.

Mr. EATON. Let the resolution be reported, so that there may be no mistake about it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution introduced by the Senator from Georgia will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That a committee of nine be appointed to take in consideration the subject of the construction of a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; and that all papers, documents, and information relating to said subject be referred to said committee.

Be it further resolved, That said committee be authorized to confer and act concurrently with any similar committee of the House of Representatives; and that said committee be authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. That is not the resolution to which the Senator from Connecticut referred. He referred to the original resolution, the joint resolution, introduced, I think, on the second day of the present session by the Senator from Georgia and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GORDON. If the Senator from West Virginia will allow me to interrupt him a moment, I think I can aid the Senate in arriving at a wise conclusion of this matter. Let me make one or two statements. I agree with him most fully that this is a subject of too much importance to be precipitated upon the consideration of the Senate without due deliberation; that it is a question upon which we must go slowly and carefully; that it should be considered by the ablest of committees. So far we are in accord; but the reasons which the Senator assigns for opposition to a select committee are such as ought to control his vote for such committee. For these reasons among others I have asked for a committee of the ablest, most experienced, and most prudent members of this body to take into consideration this whole subject, and after the fullest investigation report to the Senate. Deliberation is the very essence of the proposition for a special committee, and the Senator's assumption that those who favor a select committee are for precipitating action is altogether without support in the language of purpose of the resolution. Certainly the Senator will not pretend that there is anything in the resolution itself which involves the idea of undue haste or want of deliberation. The reverse is true. The committee is asked for the purpose of deliberation.

The purpose of the resolution was not to advance any private views I might entertain, or any views that I have publicly expressed; but to have duly considered whatever views any Senator entertained by a committee composed of the most experienced Senators.

As to the suggestion that the subject should be considered by the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman, or by the Committee on Foreign Relations, I have only to say that none of the standing committees, with their routine business, can give that direct, continuous, and exclusive attention which is necessary in considering a subject so vast, and embracing so varied and complicated issues as this may involve. As the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. DAVIS] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] have referred to my original resolution upon the general subject, it may be proper for me here to remark that so far am I from seeking to impress the committee, should it be appointed, with my own views upon the subject, I shall probably ask to be excused from service upon it. The Senator from Connecticut, [Mr. EATON,] who is the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, has already introduced a resolution upon this subject, and one branch of the question is before that committee. I had the honor to introduce a joint resolution, which was referred to the committee of which I am chairman, and that committee therefore has had charge of another branch of the question.

The proposition seems to me of great force, certainly sustained by common sense, that it would be better to organize a committee composed of members of these various committees in order that this subject might be considered in all its parts, and as one, not two or three subjects.

But I am detaining the Senate, Mr. President. I simply wanted to give briefly the reasons which moved me to ask for this committee.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut asked for the reading of the joint resolution offered by the Senator from Georgia. I send it to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Forty-sixth Congress, second session.—S. R. No. 48.

In the Senate of the United States, December 2, 1879, Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to bring in the following bill; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Joint resolution for the management of the construction of the Nicaragua Interoceanic Canal.

Whereas the project for the construction of an interoceanic canal in Nicaragua is recognized as a necessity for the prosperity of the commerce of the world, and the development of the maritime and commercial interests of the United States; and

Whereas such an enterprise must of necessity be considered as of international utility under the protection of the Government of the United States: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Government of the United States pledges to accord full and entire protection to the company to which shall be granted the concession by the government of Nicaragua for the construction of said interoceanic canal, and will secure to said company the peaceful enjoyment of the rights conceded by such grant.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Mr. President, in the hope that there will be a vote taken soon, I shall be very brief. The resolution just read shows that very early in the session the Senator from Georgia called the attention of the Senate and the country to the subject now pending. I take it that in his resolution the Senator from Georgia expressed his feelings and meaning. It will be noticed that the Senator asks this country to protect any company, any stock company or any other company, foreign, or home, or mixed, and pledges this Government to give full protection to that company on soil that now belongs to another power, not to us. However, that is a matter which I will not discuss for fear that I may get outside of the immediate question.

The Senator speaks of the importance of an able committee, a committee which can give proper attention to the consideration of the resolution offered by himself, as well as resolutions offered by others. I had thought, and I believe yet, that the committee of which the Senator from Georgia is chairman is a committee made up of Senators able to consider any subject, not only the question of this proposed canal, but any subject that might come before it.

Mr. GORDON. I beg that the Senator will do me the justice to say that nothing in my remarks certainly could be construed into a reflection on my own committee; certainly I would claim for it equal ability with any committee here. I made my objection to the consideration of the question by it on the ground that no committee which was charged with the regular routine duties of the Senate could consider this subject consecutively as it ought to be considered.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Then the Senator admits that the committee that now has the matter in charge is fully competent and able; and therefore I want it to stay there. I think that is the place for it. The Senator says now that no committee that has regular routine business to attend to is able to take up this subject and do justice to it.

Mr. GORDON. Exactly.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The Senator is aware as well as I am that there is not a Senator here but belongs to one or more committees, sometimes to three or four. Take what Senators you will they belong to regular committees, and if they do full duty to this subject when placed on a special committee their attention will have to be taken from their regular committees and given to this new committee.

We have now thirty-four standing committees, of which four are joint. We have eleven special committees. Certainly among these forty-five committees of the Senate one can be found suitable to take this subject into consideration, and I think the proper committee has it now, and I hope the Senate will allow it to remain where it is. I believe it is best for the subject, best for the country, that it should be there. Certainly the present committee has had the subject before it for nearly ninety days, and has been considering it I suppose, for the Senator tells us it is a subject that he has given great thought to; it is a subject which ought to have immediate attention. If that be so, as I have no doubt it is, then it has already had between sixty and ninety days' consideration from the committee of which the Senator from Georgia is the distinguished chairman, and I think the Senate had better let it remain where it is. I hope that course will be pursued.

Desiring a vote, I will forego any further remarks.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not rise to discuss the merits of the question that may be involved in this resolution, but the immediate point is whether or not there shall be an additional committee on this special subject, so that a proper consideration may hereafter be given to it. The resolution was passed hurriedly; it had not attracted the attention of Senators; but it was passed upon here without our knowing, many of us, what the subject-matter was that we were voting on. I think, therefore, it had better be reconsidered, so that we can then determine whether we will take action in reference to this resolution or not. I shall vote for the reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution of the Senator from Georgia was passed.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the subject-matter of this resolution involves, in the first place, some very grave legal propositions, which could very appropriately be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It involves some considerations in regard to our foreign relations which could very appropriately be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It involves a number of commercial considerations which could very appropriately go to the Committee on Commerce, where one resolution has already been referred.

The theory of special committees in the Senate, if I understand it properly, is based upon the idea, first, that there is no existing committee that can take jurisdiction appropriately of the subject-matter, or secondly, if there is a committee that can appropriately take jurisdiction, that it has not time to consider it. It is very plain on the face of this proposition that there are three committees that could appropriately take jurisdiction of the subject-matter. Then the question is, Have they the time to do so? Certainly the Committee on Foreign Relations is not overburdened with work; in fact, comparatively speaking, its work is small at this session of Congress, and I believe that is the appropriate committee to receive and consider this subject.

The Committee on Commerce has, I presume, a pretty fair share of work, but it certainly has not work sufficient to withdraw its attention entirely from this subject, or to deprive it of a full share of attention.

We have grown in the Senate, if I may so express myself, into an abuse of this business of special committees. We have now, as the Senator from West Virginia has said, some forty-odd committees. Half a dozen of those committees have little or nothing to do. You can scarcely get up a bill or resolution that does not contain some matter that could be referred possibly to some two or three different committees.

The committees of the Senate have grown wondrous fast. Originally they were but few, but owing to the exigencies of the business and the increase of the questions that come before the Senate the committees have necessarily multiplied; but in this great multiplication, I think, we have somewhat overdone the work. Here, there being three committees that could appropriately consider this matter, as appears on the very face of the resolution, I very reluctantly oppose the view entertained by the Senator from Georgia, and will vote for the proposition now pending before the Senate to reconsider its adoption.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, early in the session, perhaps on the third day, foreseeing that this great question would come before the Senate, I had the honor of introducing a resolution calling for important information from the Department of State that referred to this very subject-matter. I supposed then, as a matter of course, that this great subject would be sent to the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman. I supposed, in my innocence and simplicity, that it belonged to that committee, and therefore it was that I early introduced a resolution for obtaining information upon it.

I do not know, sir, that I ought to say that the Committee on Foreign Relations desire this work, but I ought to say this, that the Committee on Foreign Relations believe that this matter should come before them. That is their judgment, and why? The very base, the very thing that underlies this whole subject consists in what may be its foreign complications. I do not go into any discussion of that subject here, for it might require closed doors if I went at length into the matter. Second, as has just been suggested by my honorable friend from Arkansas, there are matters there that require the investigation of a judicial committee of this body. Now permit me to say as the organ of the Committee on Foreign Relations that that committee has in its list of members two of the most distinguished members of the Judiciary Committee [Mr. CONKLING and Mr. CARPENTER,] to say nothing of the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] and the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. PENDLETON,] and the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] and the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. KIRKWOOD,] who are likewise eminent lawyers and members of the Committee on Foreign Relations. And, sir, when you come to speak of the great commercial interests involved here, then permit me to say that you have on that committee gentlemen who fairly represent the great commercial interests of the country.

So I say briefly that I believe the Committee on Foreign Relations ought to have in its hands this great overshadowing question, and I undertake to say that that committee has time enough to investigate this matter, large as it may be.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I hope the Senate will reconsider the vote and then the resolution can be disposed of as is thought best. The resolution as it now stands is imperfect. It provides for a clerk, and yet does not provide for his payment, so that a new resolution would have to be introduced even for the payment of the clerk. It needs amendment in that particular.

Mr. GORDON. The resolution can be amended.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Not after it is passed. I admit that if it is reconsidered it can be amended; the Senator from Georgia is right in that, if that is what he means; and I hope he will vote for the reconsideration because then he can amend his resolution.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Connecticut it might be urged with equal propriety that the Committee on Commerce could as appropriately consider this subject as the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am aware that there are various branches of the subject. It might be urged that one branch of it should go to the Committee on Foreign Relations, one to Commerce, and one to the Judiciary; but the Senate will perceive that to divide such a subject into three questions with three committees investigating it would be equivalent to postponing its consideration for the remainder of the session. Possibly that ought to be done. I do not think so; but the object of inquiry is whether anything ought to be done, and if so what position this country should assume in reference to this grave matter.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, in the latter part of the last session of Congress I introduced a general resolution touching the Monroe doctrine, and asked that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was so referred. Very soon after the assembling of this session I gave my views on the subject, and from that time I have felt that it was of the utmost importance that the subject should receive the attention of Congress, but I have waited patiently the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I have heard of no action by that committee, but I learn from its chairman that they have not taken action because they have not received necessary papers from the State Department. So it must be assumed that the delay is no fault of that committee.

Now, I shall vote for the special committee proposed by the Senator from Georgia, because of the importance of the subject, and because I believe that something will be done by a special committee in the way of enunciating again a doctrine which the people of this country are wedded to: that there shall be no interference with American affairs on the Isthmus by any foreign power or by any foreign company under the protection of any foreign power. I vote for this in the hope that that question will be met by a special committee, and met more speedily than it can be by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was agreed to, there being on a division—ayes 29, noes 25.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the resolution?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That a committee of nine be appointed to take in consideration the subject of the construction of a canal to connect the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans; and that all papers, documents, and information relating to said subject be referred to said committee.

Be it further resolved, That said committee be authorized to confer and act concurrently with any similar committee of the House of Representatives; and that said committee be authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, a disposition, had I that disposition, to participate in this investigation, or a dread, if I had a dread, of the labor or responsibility involved in doing it, would be in my case exactly evenly divided between the two standing committees of which mention has been made, inasmuch as I have the honor to be a member in a very subordinate degree, of the Committee on Foreign Relations and also of the Committee on Commerce. So looking at this matter in any possible relation it can have to me or to any labor that I may be called upon to perform, of course it cannot be a matter of the slightest preference whether it goes to one committee or to the other. I feel moved, however, to express the opinion that as between the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Relations, this matter should go to the latter committee, and I agree entirely with what has been said by other Senators that one branch of it, as it is called, should not be left with one committee and another branch with another committee. Indeed I think I should deny that this is a subject consisting of different branches in the sense in which I understand that suggestion to have been made. It is an entirety. It is an important matter. It involves, as most important matters do, considerations of different kinds; it involves economic questions, questions of commerce; it involves practical questions, questions of engineering, the feasibility of a certain projet, its advantages compared with another. It involves also, as the Senator from Connecticut has not too emphatically stated, our relations with foreign governments; and not only so, but the position we shall undertake to maintain as matter of public law, as matter of public principle held by us as one of the nations of the earth. But that does not make it to my comprehension a subject of different branches in that sense which implies that these branches are separable from each other so as to constitute substantive topics of investigation and of action; far from it.

The most customary bill we have, one providing for a private claim if you please, involves a question of law, a question of constitutional law, a question of fact, and besides some question which appeals especially to the knowledge which business men and experts have. That then is a matter of different branches, and you might say that one branch of it ought to go to the Judiciary Committee, and another branch ought to go to the Military or Naval Committee, and another branch ought to go to the Committee on Claims. That is not so, Mr. President. It is, I submit, impracticable, unreal, and a refinement, I will not say upon sophistry, but a refinement upon fact.

This subject which we are considering, larger in proportions, greater in duration, than the average subject coming before us, falls, I humbly submit, within the category to which I have referred it; to be dealt with intelligently it should be dealt with by some one committee, and not be distributed about in fragments or supposed fragments among several committees. I agree entirely, to return to the suggestion with which I began, that as between the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Relations it belongs more appropriately to the latter committee, and my judgment is that to that committee, as contradistinguished from any other, even a special committee, it had better go.

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. GARLAND] said that to which I agree touching special committees; but he omitted to say a thing which it seems to me answered the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. GORDON.] That Senator commented very naturally upon the fact that the standing committees of the Senate are more or less engrossed with what I believe he called routine business. Yes, they are; but let me inquire, suppose the Senator from Georgia himself, in place of being at the head of the Committee on Commerce if that committee were to consider this subject, is put at the head of a special committee, are there any more hours in the twenty-four? Is he relieved of any other duty? Has he any more time in his character as chairman of a special committee to devote to this subject than he would have to devote to it as chairman of the Committee on Commerce? Not at all. Take the other members of the Committee on Commerce, is not what I have said of the chairman true of them? And going beyond the Committee on Commerce, some members of the Senate must compose this special committee. Is it true that a special committee on such a subject would be composed of members of the Senate selected because they had been omitted, as far as such Senators could be, from other committees? That would be very odd. Senators have been put, I think, upon the Committee on Foreign Relations with some reference to their supposed fitness and capability for service upon that committee, and so upon the other committees. In going over the Senate, thus all members of the Senate are upon committees; and although you may find a Senator who is upon one more committee than another Senator, or possibly upon two more committees than another Senator, nevertheless the general fact remains that, resorting as you must for the constituents of a special committee to the seventy-six Senators, you take over again the very men who are already allotted upon the standing committees and you give them no more time, and you do not alter at all the fact that they are all more or less encumbered by requisitions upon their time. So I do not see the force of the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia. I should see its force if there were nine Senators here not members of any standing committees, nine Senators uncharged substantially with committee duties and who were willing to devote themselves as members of a special committee to this subject. Then it could be said urgently and conclusively "You get the benefit of nine fresh men undistracted and unwearied by their duty upon other committees." Not so now.

Then, as the Senator from Arkansas suggested, if I am right in what I have said, the sole remaining inquiry is whether there is no standing committee adapted to this subject; or to state the inquiry in other words, whether it is necessary to create a committee in order to have one to which this subject may appropriately go? Can that be said? The contrary has been said, as I understand, by the very Senators who have voted in favor of a special committee, because they have said that not only is there one committee, but more than one; they have named at least two that would be appropriate to this purpose.

As I said, Mr. President, I have no possible interest of my own; desiring to avoid labor on this subject I have none; wishing, if I did, to participate in this investigation, I have none between these two committees; but I believe that the usage of the Senate, its practice in analogous cases, and the suggestions of prudence and convenience would indicate that the Committee on Foreign Relations should take charge of this matter unless that committee is in point of fact unsuited or incompetent to do it. I do not think that is the case; on the contrary I think the whole committee, with only one exception, is made up of Senators very well adapted to it; but if the reverse were true, that would be a reason for withdrawing a subject of this kind from that committee. Unless that be true I can think of no reason, and therefore I shall vote against this resolution, if that be the form in which the vote is to be taken, and I should vote with great pleasure for a motion which I venture to suggest to my honorable friend from Connecticut would come most appropriately from him,—a motion in the nature of an amendment which would carry to the Committee on Foreign Relations all the various resolutions and bills relating to this one subject.

If the Senator from Connecticut will move as an amendment that the bill introduced by the Senator from Georgia, which went originally pro forma to the Committee on Commerce, and all other bills and resolutions touching this subject shall be committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that I suggest to him will enable those of us who agree with him to give intelligent expression to our wish by our vote; and if hereafter it turns out that it is necessary to clothe the Committee on Foreign Relations with any powers additional to those which all committees have, be it power to send for persons and papers, be it power to do any particular thing, I presume there will be no such thing, in addition to those powers customary with committees, then the committee upon ascertaining that, through its chairman, can come to the Senate, and ask for such enlargement of its powers as it may be disposed, and the Senate will give or withhold, as upon presentation of the case may seem wise.

All that is needed now to execute the purpose stated by the Senator from Connecticut by a single vote is for him to move that all of these bills and resolutions—if there are enough of them to say "all," both of them if there are but two—be committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and I hope he will make that motion, and for one I shall vote for it with great pleasure.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. President——

Mr. EATON. My friend will pardon me.

Mr. GORDON. I only want to say one word.

Mr. EATON. I wish to make one suggestion to my friend from New York.

Mr. GORDON. I yield.

Mr. EATON. I had thought of the very motion to which the Senator from New York gave utterance, but it struck me then and, with great deference to him, it does still, that this being a resolution to raise a special committee for a certain purpose, I ought not to move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONKLING. Will my honorable friend pardon me? I do not propose that he shall make any such motion. This is a resolution declaring that a special committee shall be raised for a certain purpose. I propose to the Senator that as an amendment in the nature of a substitute he move that that subject be committed to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and unless the modesty of the honorable Senator stands in the way, I cannot see any objection he can have to that—not a motion to refer this resolution to the Committee on Foreign Relations, but to commit the subject to which the resolution refers, and all the papers relating to that subject, to that committee.

Mr. EATON. My own impression still is that the better way is to determine the question upon this resolution. If the Senate determine that a special committee shall be raised, so be it. If they determine that it shall not be raised, then, it strikes me, at another time it would be proper to move that all matters connected with the interoceanic canal projet be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CONKLING. If the honorable Senator wants to be economic of the subject, and make it cover several days, I agree with him there; that course would enable us to enjoy it for another day; but if the object is by one single vote to ascertain the wish of the Senate, I submit to him with a good deal of confidence that the ordinary way is this: The Senate have reconsidered this resolution by a very pronounced vote; and the ordinary way is just to move straight and direct that the subject go to the Committee on Foreign Relations. If that vote carries, that is the end of the whole thing; if it does not, then other alternatives can be presented.

Mr. EATON. Very well, Mr. President, I will accept the suggestion and at the proper time make the motion; but my friend from Delaware desires now to be heard. After that I will make the motion.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I doubt very much whether if at this time, or at any former period of the history of this country——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that the morning hour, as extended, has expired, and the unfinished business now comes up.

Mr. GORDON. I think we can get a vote directly. I hope the Senator from Delaware will be allowed to proceed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there unanimous consent that this resolution be further considered? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. BAYARD. I was about to say, Mr. President, that I did not think any question in our history had filled the minds of the American people with graver interest than that which has been under discussion; not of course the comparatively trivial matter whether the subject shall be committed for the purpose of examination to one or the other of the standing committees of the body, or whether a special committee shall be raised; but I mean that this body will only reflect the almost unanimous spirit of the American people when it exhibits a very deep interest in the subject-matter to which this resolution relates. It is to be approached very deliberately; it is to be considered with gravity. No attention that can be paid to it is superfluous; if it shall be deemed a better method of consideration that a special committee, no matter what may be its numbers, shall be raised for the purpose, it had better be done.

Now, sir, it is plain, without entering at all upon the merits of the question, that this subject has two branches. I will not say which of the two is the more important. The one is the political branch, touching international politics; the other is the commercial branch, touching our share in the world's trade which the work proposed is so profoundly to affect. If we treat it as a commercial question, it naturally would go to the committee constituted by this body to consider commercial questions. If we are to consider it as an international question, it is to go to that committee of the body appointed to consider questions of that character. But it is a question in which these two features are indissolubly blended. They cannot be separated in their consideration. Hand in hand they must go together, and together must they be considered.

Now, sir, it pleased the Senate—with what premonition I know not, for I was not consulted; upon the basis of what preliminaries I know not—it pleased the Senate some days ago to raise a special committee, that is to say, to pass a resolution authorizing the creation of a special committee to whom the whole of this great subject should be committed, for the purpose of preliminary examination, for the purpose of laying sure foundations over which this people are to walk, upon which this Government is to stand in its relation to the subject; and it seemed to me that there never was a question demanding a special committee more justly than the one referred to in the present resolution.

It was no reflection, it could be no reflection for a gentleman who happened to be the chairman of one of these committees, that of Commerce, [Mr. GORDON,] to move that his committee should be relieved from the consideration of this vast subject. None could be intended as to the Committee on Foreign Relations, of which my distinguished friend from Connecticut so worthily fills the post of chairman, because over and over again in the history of our legislation, when engaged in the midst of general business, subjects embracing peculiar and important matters have been committed to special committees. Thus we have had special committees upon the great subject of Pacific railroads. Beside that, there was the Committee on Transportation, differing as to name, agreeing entirely in the subject-matter; and so I could go on to illustrate this subject over and over again by my own experience in this body.

I can understand well that gentlemen charged with the arduous duties of both the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Foreign Relations may prefer a special committee; indeed, I believe some gentlemen already are members of each of these committees, and to no more worthy hands could this subject be submitted; but when already there has been what I term this due mark of respect to a great subject enacted by the Senate in its vote a few days ago, showing that they were responding to this widespread and profound feeling of the American people that this subject should be considered by their representatives with all the gravity and care its importance demands, I for one was not willing, nor am I now, by withdrawing this special committee, in any degree to have it supposed that there is a lessening of interest in the subject, or that there can be a difference of opinion between Americans on this great subject. I trust, sir, there will be none. I trust, upon a subject so profoundly interesting to us as a nation as this, that there will be none, but that all the light and all the information shall be gathered in from every quarter to enable us, as the representatives of this people and of this union of republics, to deal with the great question that underlies all this—a question of continental control and power. Important as the commercial question is, the more important one of geographical relations and power arises.

I hope, therefore, this special committee, once authorized by a vote of the body, may not now have its existence put an end to.

Mr. McDONALD. Mr. President, I disliked to interrupt the Senator from Delaware at the time the Chair announced that the regular order was properly before the Senate, but as he has concluded his remarks I call for the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair announced that the time for the consideration of the unfinished business had arrived, and put the question to the Senate, and the Senate directed that this matter should be further heard.

Mr. McDONALD. At the time that announcement was made the Senator from Delaware was occupying the attention of the Senate, and I did not wish to interrupt him by an objection then.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the question to the Senate if desired, Shall this resolution be further considered at this time?

The question was decided in the negative.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is Senate bill No. 19.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House insisted on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3015) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. W. H. FORNEY, of Alabama, Mr. J. H. BLOUNT, of Georgia, and Mr. J. G. CANNON, of Illinois, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the following joint resolutions:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 203) making appropriations for the Reform School of the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 157) for the relief of M. M. Herr.

RESUMPTION AND FUNDING.

Mr. WHYTE. I ask permission to make at this time some reports from the Committee on Printing.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will receive the reports if there be no objection.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved, That 5,000 extra copies be printed of Executive Document No. 9, Forty-sixth Congress, being letter from Secretary of Treasury, transmitting letters and documents pertaining to resumption and funding; 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate, and 3,000 copies for the use of the House.

NORTH AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies each of volumes 4 and 5 Contributions to North American Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, and with the necessary illustrations; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

DOCUMENTS FOR MEMBERS OF THE PRESS.

Mr. WHYTE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the following resolution, reported adversely thereon, and it was postponed indefinitely:

Resolved, That the superintendent of the Senate document-room be directed to furnish each member of the press whose name appears in the Congressional Directory as the duly authorized representative of a daily newspaper with one copy of every bill, resolution, and document printed for the use of the Senate.

MILITARY WARRANT LAND LOCATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 19) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain and certify the amount of land located with military warrants in the States described therein, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the motion of Mr. EDMUNDS to postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, having reached the conclusion that this bill ought not to pass, I shall very briefly give some of the reasons which have brought me to this conclusion. In the first place, it is a stale claim. Had it been a good one, with so many interested parties, it should have been pressed from the outset by Senators whose memory I will not impeach by charging them with a neglect of their obvious duty. I do not believe the Senators from eighteen States have neglected any duty. In the second place, it is, in my judgment, against the interests of the States to set the dangerous example of pressing vast claims here resting upon so feeble pretensions. If States could appear here with plausible arguments to prove that the Garden of Eden was sold and not given to our first parents, and claim 5 per cent. on the sale, would it not encourage the presentment of many other even more baseless claims? Instead of this, ought not the States to insist upon the most rigid scrutiny of all claims presented, and, by meting out exact justice to all, maintain that economy which is appropriate to our form of government and most acceptable to the people? The success of this questionable measure would be sure to encourage a brood of claims here already too large.

The reading of this bill will show by the short and difficult curves it makes, not only the crooked, rough, and impracticable road it is sought to travel, but also the ingenuity displayed in tunneling and overcoming mountains. The original law upon which this bill claims to be founded—so far as the State of Iowa, the chief claimant, is concerned—is a bill supplementary to the admission of the State which provides a fund for certain purposes to be made up from "5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sale of lands within said State, which shall be hereafter sold by Congress." The first section of this bill carefully skips all around these words and seeks to ascertain "the amount of public lands entered by the location of military scrip and land warrants" in the several States—wholly a different matter, and in large part a whole generation after the facts. It is not confined to the sale of land, nor to their net proceeds, but gropes about after what may have been located through donations or grants of the Government. To a plain understanding the case has not even a colorable foundation to rest upon, and would be thrown out as it appears to me in any court within five minutes after the attorneys ceased talking—unless my friends the Senators from Iowa happened to be the last talkers. There can be no valid claim except for lands actually sold, and no one pretends that the States have not had all that, but it is not on any sale, it is not on any net proceeds that the bill is based. What kind of a figure would all these claims cut—eighteen of them yoked together—in the Court of Claims? I much doubt if many of the States would reckon their share of sufficient value to risk a retainer to any good lawyer to pursue it. The amount to be secured to several of the States, if the bill should pass, will hardly amount to a sum greater than they will be required to contribute to the revenues of the country.

The question naturally arises, were any pledges ever made by the Government that all the public lands should be sold and sold at the fixed and unalterable price of $1.25 per acre? If no such pledges were ever given, directly or indirectly—as surely none were given—then the Government has done nothing it had not a perfect right to do; that is, to convert the lands to public uses, to sell for any price, one cent per acre if it should choose to do so, or to donate them for any beneficial purposes to the States, the public, to corporations, or to private citizens, without price. The liberality and generosity of the Government has not been hampered in any direction, and it cannot be subjected to a penalty of 5 per cent. upon its bounties, nor upon homesteads without money and without price given to its war-worn veterans or to any other of its citizens. Nor can the charities of the Government be pursued for a 5 per cent. State tax upon the aid to build railroads begged from the Government by States represented as unable otherwise to furnish means for their construction, although, the alternate sections having been sold at double price, the States have actually received just as much as they would had all the lands been sold. And yet this is the complexion to which it all comes at last: that the power of the Government to make a donation of public lands, for either national or State uses, shall be subject to the condition of a 5 per cent. donation to certain States from the Treasury of the United States at the same time! The Government of the United States is the sole proprietor of the public lands—not merely of ninety-five one-hundredths—and can dispose of them by gift and give a good title to the same without being forced to placate States by an additional gift of money.

Curiously enough it is provided in the second section of this bill that certificates of indebtedness may be used in payment for the amounts allowed which are to run twenty years with interest at 3.65 per cent. per annum. These claims come down to us from "the good old days when Adam delved and Eve spun," and if they are really due, the claimants have already, wittingly or unwittingly, waited much too long. The United States ought not to withhold the moneys of such needy creditors. Why, then, should any suspicion of the validity be thrown upon claims, though they have slept soundly so long, by making the terms of payment apparently so easy? We are only required to give our note. It is true, perhaps, that the authors of the bill have not consulted easy payment so far as they might have done, for they might have demanded silver dollars at once, which we all know the Treasury is most anxious to unload.

Mr. McDONALD. I would suggest to the Senator from Vermont, that under the bill as it is drawn the Secretary of the Treasury may pay in silver dollars, for he is to pay the amount out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MORRILL. I know there is an alternative put in as an amendment; but the other marches in front, and I suppose is to take the lead. An offer of long credit is usually suggestive of some abatement, or, in the language of horse-dealers, if I may be pardoned, some outs, in the value of the consideration. In this case, the lands not having been sold, it is all outs. The framers of the bill are somewhat too willing to trust.

The theory of this bill is that when the Government should part with any lands they must be sold and must bring exactly and have brought $1.25 per acre, but the facts will not support the theory. Millions of acres were parted with which were not sold, and even the recipients of military scrip and land warrants when they put them on the market generally obtained no more than at the rate of fifty or sixty cents per acre instead of $1.25. The assumption of the latter sum as a basis of computation of the 5 per cent. is entirely unwarranted and the whole idea of a percentage on military scrip or land warrants is as much a mathematical impossibility as would be a percentage on bravery or patriotism.

But the most wonderful part of this bill is to be found, like the postscript of a lady's billet-doux, in a final proviso, where, if Congress will only pass this bill, it is to be an estoppel of all claims of any State for 5 per cent. "on account of any lands granted to such State, corporation, or person or persons for the purposes of internal improvements, or to aid in the construction of railroads or canals, or for any other purpose whatsoever, or on account of any lands which have been, or may hereafter be, entered under the homestead laws of the United States." If we will give them our coat they are solemnly to be estopped from claiming our cloak also. But if they have the right in law or equity why should they make a bargain not to strip us of the whole? The United States will pay all claims justly due, and it has no idea, I trust, of being tempted to pay one claim by a condition that another, just as honest and not a whit less so, shall be abandoned, or at least postponed, to a more convenient season of another generation.

How will Senators in the interested States justify themselves to their constituents for the abandonment of the long list of land grants differing in no essential principle from those embraced in the bill upon which 5 per cent. is now sought? It may be, perhaps, successfully done by representing all that was sought as extremely doubtful, and that it was needful to appear munificent in the abandonment of what many thought very preposterous items in the account. Unquestionably they will try to make it appear that they have managed the interest of their States in an honest as well as very thrifty manner. But suppose some of the States should not think so and refuse their acceptance. Then it will be found that we have established a precedent for the whole batch of these strictly analogous claims. We have offered to pay two of them, and an adherence to the same principle will require us to pay all. The absolution promised here may not prove to be a receipt for all demands. It is unfortunate for the success of this bill that its true scope and character is so badly exposed by the recital in the final proviso which I have already referred to. The claims proposed to be estopped are logically entitled to as much consideration as the disposal of military scrip or land warrants, but the absurdity of a 5 per cent. claim by a State upon donations made to the same State is a little more conspicuous, and 5 per cent. on homesteads given to those who have become citizens and tax-payers of the States was evidently too deep a dive into the Treasury for even the authors of this bill to venture upon.

Whatever Senators may feel inclined to do in behalf of a claim which seems to me so utterly unsupported by the plain reading of the letter and spirit of the laws upon which it is attempted to found it, I can hardly believe any Senator so serious in its advocacy, unless in the heat of his own argument he has convinced himself, that he would personally and in his own behalf think of presenting it to any court or even to Congress with any expectation of finding any favor.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Mr. President, I had not intended to make any remarks upon the passage of this bill until this morning. The remarks of the Senator from Vermont who has just addressed the Senate [Mr. MORRILL] seems to me to have presented this matter in a very mistaken light; and I shall merely address myself to one or two of the prominent points which suggest themselves to me at this time.

There are several States interested and the interests of which are involved in this bill. As I am more familiar with the laws pertaining to the admission of my own State, I shall in the course of my remarks confine myself more particularly to the provisions of the law in the enabling act providing for the adoption of a constitution by the State of Minnesota.

The Senator from Vermont who has just taken his seat started with the announcement that this is a stale claim. Mr. President, that is a very incorrect term to apply under any circumstances to the claim of a State in this Union. This is not a claim by a private individual against the United States. This is not a matter of any private nature or benefit. It is a matter of a public character entirely. No private interests are here involved. It is a case where several of the States of the Union present for congressional consideration questions which involve the public policy of this country, and which involve their rights as members of the United States of America. No claim can become stale which a sovereign State is entitled to as against the Government of the United States. No claim by a State can become stale as between it and the Government of the United States. With regard to such matters these are sovereignties, and the term "stale" never applies to any rights to which they are entitled.

Now, Mr. President, what is the grant upon which these States say they are entitled to certain sums of money from the Government of the United States? The act "to authorize the people of the Territory of Minnesota to form a constitution and State government preparatory to their admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original States" contains certain propositions submitted by the General Government and embodied in this act of Congress, stated in the fifth section of the act the title of which I have read. The first paragraph of the section is as follows:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the following be, and the same are hereby, offered to the said convention of the people of Minnesota—

That is, the convention to be called for the adoption of a constitution—for their free acceptance or rejection, which, if accepted by the convention, shall be obligatory on the United States and upon the said State of Minnesota.

Then follow four paragraphs with reference, one to school lands, another to lands for a university; the third to lands for public buildings; the fourth, to salt springs; and the fifth, is as follows:

Fifth. That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands lying within the said State, which shall be sold by Congress after the admission of the said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same, shall be paid to said State, for the purpose of making public roads and internal improvements, as the Legislature shall direct: Provided, The foregoing propositions herein offered are on the condition that the said convention which shall form the constitution of said State shall provide, by a clause in said constitution, or an ordinance, irrevocable without the consent of the United States, that said State shall never interfere with the primary disposal of the soil within the same by the United States, or with any regulations Congress may find necessary for securing the title in said soil to bona fide purchasers thereof; and that no tax shall be imposed on lands belonging to the United States, and that in no case shall non-resident proprietors be taxed higher than residents.

This, it will be observed, is a compact between the General Government and the State of Minnesota. The State is required by this provision to denude herself of her sovereignty to the extent embraced in the terms of this proposition. So that it is no mere private contract, as a contract between individuals would be; it is a compact between two sovereignties, and whatever is a fair general construction of that compact is the only one which can be given in this case.

Now, the provision is that the State shall be entitled to receive from the General Government "5 per cent. of the net proceeds of sales of all public lands lying within the said State, which shall be sold by Congress after the admission of the said State into the Union, after deducting all the expenses incident to the same." The sole question then is, whether or not the entry of land within our State by a land warrant issued by the General Government can be construed to be a sale either in law or in equity. If it can, then the State is entitled to the 3 per cent. of the net proceeds of such sale.

The Senator from Vermont declares that the same principle would apply to lands granted for railroad purposes or for any public improvement. In that lies the fallacy of the Senator's position. Those grants are not sales. They cannot be construed to be sales. They are donations by the General Government in the exercise of her sovereign policy, and are not sales in any sense of the term, and are not so regarded and cannot be so regarded; but with reference to the entry of lands by military land warrants, the case is wholly different. By section 2414 of the Revised Statutes it is provided:

All warrants for military bounty lands which have been or may hereafter be issued under any law of the United States, and all valid locations of the same which have been or may hereafter be made, are declared to be assignable by deed or instrument of writing, made and executed according to such form and pursuant to such regulations as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, so as to vest the assignee with all the rights of the original owner of the warrant or location.

SEC. 2415. The warrants which have been or may hereafter be issued in pursuance of law may be located according to the legal subdivisions of the public lands in one body upon any lands of the United States subject to private entry at the time of such location at the minimum price. When such warrant is located on lands which are subject to entry at a greater minimum than $1.25 per acre, the locator shall pay to the United States in cash the difference between the value of such warrants at $1.25 per acre and the tract of land located on. But where such tract is rated at $1.25 per acre, and does not exceed the area specified in the warrant, it must be taken in full satisfaction thereof.

The public lands of the United States are divided into certain subdivisions, forty, eighty, and one hundred and sixty acres each, and fractions of those subdivisions termed lots. When those lands are offered for public sale under direction of the proper officer of the Government and remain unsold, they are then the subject of private entry; that is, any individual may enter any subdivision of those lands by paying the price fixed upon them by law, $1.25 per acre, outside, of course, of railroad limits.

These bounty land warrants were issued by the Government as a bounty in reward of military service performed by soldiers of the United States. They are a bounty as between the Government and the soldier. By the operations of law having been made assignable and transferable, the owner of the warrant may either use it by locating the warrant upon land or he may dispose of it for cash. It is not a gift of the land. The Government gave no land when she issued bounty land warrants. She did not give, nor did she enter into any contract with the holder of a warrant that he should have, any specific land. It is merely a promise or a contract issued by the Government and put in the hands of the soldier, which was her bounty to him for the military service he had rendered. The possessors of those warrants not desiring to locate the warrants themselves disposed of them for cash, so that the warrants were quoted in the financial markets at certain cash prices. Their sale was as common as any other article of trade or any other valuable security; they were quoted in all the reports of the money markets; their price was well fixed and defined, not at so low a price as the Senator mentioned as a rule. The warrants issued for forty acres, for eighty acres, for one hundred and sixty acres, would be of different value, but their value was well-defined, and there was a cash price for them, and the warrants located were not located by the soldiers to whom they were issued as a rule, but they were purchased throughout all parts of the country, and the lands that were subject to private entry were purchased by the holders of the warrants and paid for by them instead of with cash.

Why, Mr. President, the very fact that where a fraction of a governmental subdivision amounted to more than would be paid by the face of a warrant the balance was required in cash illustrates the fact that the payment by warrant was payment of part of the price of the sale of the land. If the warrant did not pay the full price the balance had to be paid in cash. There certainly was a sale; surely the Government sold such pieces of land; and can the mere fact that in some cases the amount of lands entered coincided with the number of acres specified in the warrant which was authorized to purchase the land under the act of Congress change the nature of the transaction? It seems to me the proposition is self-evident that under this provision of the law the purchase was made at the land office, and the mere delivery of the warrant to the land officer was a payment of the price of the land, a payment authorized by the General Government, and the price of the warrant was fixed by the Government itself at the rate of one dollar and a quarter for every acre specified in the warrant.

Then take another illustration to show that this transaction of an entry by warrant of lands subject to private entry was a sale. Under the policy of the Government the citizen had a right to make actual settlement upon any subdivision of the public lands, and by complying with the provisions of the pre-emption law he became entitled to secure from the Government a patent for the land upon which he had settled. Actual occupancy must characterize his settlement; he must remain upon the land; and the only right secured by that settlement is a right of what? A right of pre-emption; that is, the right of buying the land prior to any other person. Then, with this right of pre-emption secured by his settlement, he had a right to pay for that land either in cash or by the terms of the act of Congress with a land warrant covering the number of acres which he claimed in his settlement. Is not that a payment? Does the law not characterize the transaction as a buying and as a selling in the very nature of the terms themselves? And vast bodies of our public lands were settled upon by pre-emptors, and their pre-emptions were paid for by the delivery of these land warrants to the agents of the Government at the land offices throughout the country, and these were lands which were not even subject to private purchase or sale, because the pre-emption laws were intended to secure actual settlement upon the public lands of the country and were adopted as a part of the policy of the country for filling up these Western States and securing an actual cultivation and improvement of the soil by the occupants.

Then, Mr. President, it seems to me, by the very terms used, that the party by his settlement having a prior right of purchase, and being permitted by the law to pay the purchase price by a land warrant delivered to the agents of the Government at a price fixed by the Government, the law makes the warrant the equivalent of cash and the Government declares that she receives it as the price of the land sold by the Government to the settler.

Now, Mr. President, there never has been any unnecessary delay upon the part of the States in presenting this view of the question to the General Government. It has been insisted by the States that that was the true character of the transaction and that under this law they were entitled to 5 per cent. of the proceeds or value of lands thus entered; but the Government by its officers decided adversely to that position, and the States have presented their claims to Congress time and again, but Congress has not taken action, and now we have arrived at that stage of the proceeding when we are called upon to do so.

Very much has been said here about the generosity of the Government in regard to the lands given to the different States in the West. I have no complaint whatever to make against the General Government in regard to her policy in dealing with the States of the West. It has been generous; it has been worthy of a government like ours. It has been a characteristic of a national policy of which I am proud. It has resulted in the building up of an empire in the western part of our country that the older States are proud of as are the new States. And, sir, this policy has been as much for the benefit of our friends in the older States as it has been for our own. Who are we in the West, I should like to know? We are the sons of the people of New England, the sons of the people of the Middle States, the sons of the people of the Southern States, and we intend to keep them all together; no sectional distinction is to be tolerated as between the West and the East. So far as the people of the State which I have the honor in part to represent are concerned, they indulge in no sectional feelings toward any part of this country. We look with as much favor and regard to the East, and we regard the rights of other States as carefully and sacredly as we do our own, and so far as we are concerned no sectional spirit will ever be indulged there. What benefits us benefits the States of the country throughout the whole nation.

I trust, Mr. President, that this matter as to the claim made here will not be regarded, as it seems to have been in some instances, as a claim which has been hunted up from ancient records, or which has not been anticipated ever since the transaction occurred. We have always believed that this amount of money was due to these States, and for that reason we are here asking the General Government to do what we believe she has promised in her acts of Congress and her compacts with the States.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. President, I did not intend saying anything upon this bill after having heard the subject so well handled by the Senators who have represented my sentiments, which are entirely in favor of the bill, and I would not now say a word if it were not that the people whom I have the honor, in part, to represent are interested in the question and believe that injustice has been done them. Hence I think it is but right that I should explain the reasons that they would give if called upon and were permitted to speak for themselves.

It will be recollected, Mr. President, that the course pursued by the Government toward the settlers on the public lands began first by requiring the money to be paid in hand for the land. Afterward it became more and more liberal toward the people. It granted them the right of pre-emption, and gave them by that right a credit, at first I believe of twelve months, and required the money to be paid at the end of the time agreed upon. Congress also passed a homestead law, and in other ways gave the people encouragement to settle upon the public lands.

But as I promised to be brief I will confine myself on this part of the subject to the pre-emption law, which in its operation was a time contract with the purchaser, giving him twelve months' time in which to pay for his land. Now, at the end of this time the purchaser could take his choice, to pay in cash or to pay in a land warrant. Now, if he paid for his land in cash, then there would be no question about it, the State would be entitled to her 5 per cent. on the sale; but if he paid in a warrant, the State, according to the doctrine advanced by the opposition to this bill, must lose the per cent. Now, mark it, this contract was for so much cash, say for a quarter section or one hundred and sixty acres, $200; but a land warrant calling for one hundred and sixty acres was just as good for the purposes of paying this debt as the $200 in cash. Now, to my mind there is no justice in this. In other words, the General Government owes it to a State to be as just and as faithful in its dealings with it as it would require in return.

The legislation on the subject of gifts to the States has been various, and in every instance I believe in which an enabling act has been passed for any new State or for any Territory to become a State, this 5 per cent. clause has been inserted in some shape. The clause varies according to the condition of the State, or of the people, who occupy that State, showing that it was not put in by any accident, nor was it done because of the form having been in some other bill and transferred to the new bill, but it seems to have been one of those questions that had been as thoroughly canvassed as any other connected with the subject under consideration at the time, which was, providing for the admission of a new State.

At the beginning, in the case of Ohio for instance, Congress gave one-twentieth, as they called it, which is the same thing, reserving, of course, 95 per cent. to be distributed among the other States, but the new State should have one-twentieth of the proceeds, 2 per cent. of which was to be expended, under the direction of Congress, in connecting the navigable waters entering the Atlantic Ocean, with the Ohio River, thus showing that it was the intention of Congress to encourage the settlement of the new country, to encourage people to go there and to build up that country. That was the object, and I presume has been the object in every bill of this character that has been passed.

I shall confine myself, however, as I said, to what my own people want and what they require, because this subject has been so fully canvassed and discussed that I do not deem it necessary for me to add any lengthy remarks to what has already been said, and so well said, by the Senators who have preceded me; so I shall content myself with simply a brief allusion to the effects of the present law in my own State, and follow the example, in this particular, which has been set by the Senator who has just left the floor, [Mr. McMILLAN.] The operation of the law, I have no doubt, is the same in his State as it is in mine.

The 5 per cent. fund was not given to be used for the same purpose in all the States. It was given to Ohio partly to make roads connecting it with the eastern part of the country. In Indiana and Illinois the same clause was put in, but it was for roads and canals, and they were to use three-fifths of it under the direction of the Legislatures of the States. In Alabama, two-fifths were to be appropriated for roads and canals and the improvement of the navigation of the rivers. That is what I suppose suited the people of that State, and they asked for it and obtained it. In Illinois two-fifths was for roads leading to the State, to be expended under the direction of Congress, and the residue was to be used in the encouragement of learning, one-sixth of which should be exclusively bestowed on a college or university. In Iowa it was given for common schools, in Minnesota for roads and internal improvements. In Nevada, where there was a different kind of country, it was for improving roads and constructing ditches and canals, and effecting a general system of irrigation of the agricultural lands in the State, evidently, as I have said, looking to the interests and particular needs of the people and encouraging the people in settling and in building up these new States. In Kansas and in Nebraska it was given for common schools; in Colorado for making internal improvements in the State, but not to include the homestead or other reserved lands. If there had been any interest on the part of Congress to curtail this thing or to settle this difficult question that we have up now, why was it not put in that enabling act which so recently passed Congress? Not one word is there said in relation to warrants, but they do say it shall not include homesteads or other reserved lands.

But, as I said, I shall confine myself mainly to my own State. What were the gifts to be bestowed upon her? And here let me remark that those gifts seem to be somewhat in the nature of a marriage outfit. It seems there was a union proposed to these Territories saying, "Now, if you will come and make one of the States of this Union, if you will stop the expenses that we are now at in maintaining your government as a Territory, set yourselves up and become an independent State, we will give you certain things." Among the rest the United States usually gave in the earlier days the sixteenth section in each township for schools, and now they give the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. Ever since the days when the Kansas enabling act was passed, I believe the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections have been given for common-school purposes. They gave six sections of land for each salt spring, to the number of twelve. In most of the new States they gave, I believe, twenty sections for public buildings at the State capital. In many of the States they gave a certain amount for a university or college. In addition to that they gave them the 5 per cent., as I have said, to some for one purpose and to some for another. In my own State they gave it to assist in building up common schools, whereby we should be enabled to educate free of charge all the youth of the State, which is a cherished object among my people this day, and it will soon be secured.

These were the gifts that we were to have, conditioned, as we have learned of the Senator who has just yielded the floor, for the same condition applies to my State as his, that an article should be entered into which should go to show that they would irrevocably allow the matter to stand in the hands of Congress to manage the primary disposal of the soil. To agree that that should not be interfered with, was one of the main things required of the State when she entered into the Union.

Now, I want to show the gifts that they have bestowed upon our State other than this 5 per cent. I would ask any Senator here if he would consider that it would be fair and honorable treatment to our State, under this contract, to deprive us of the land that we received for public buildings, for salt springs, for a penitentiary, and for the other purposes of the contract? There were five provisions, alluding, first, to the school lands; second, to the salt springs; third, to the public buildings; fourth, to the building of a penitentiary; fifth, to the 5 per cent. fund. I ask if it would have been fair treatment to our State to have deprived us by any means whatever of these values that go to set up our State, to enable us, in other words, to commence business as a State by constructing our public buildings, improving our salt springs, &c.? I do not think there is a Senator who would say that that would be fair treatment; and yet it would be just as fair as now by any species of legislation to deprive us of our rights to the money after the land has been sold by the Government. I know it is admitted that we are entitled to 5 per cent. on the actual sales for cash; but the question now comes, and it is the only question that we have to settle here, whether this disposition of the lands was not in the nature of a sale, whether it was not a purchase on the part of the individual as much when bought and paid for in warrants as if it had been paid for in cash; if so, then why are we not entitled to the 5 per cent. when warrants are laid upon the land?

I will venture the assertion here that nineteen-twentieths of all land that was entered by land warrants in my State, which amounts to over two million acres, would have been sold at the same time and to the same parties for cash if it had not been for these warrants being obtained at a little less than $1.25 an acre. It required $200 to buy one hundred and sixty acres if you paid cash. A warrant was just enough less to induce a man to put his money in a warrant, and save a few dollars and then buy the land with the warrant. I happened to know a good deal about this at the time. I know, as was said by my colleague yesterday, that warrants were so well fixed in their values in our country, and I suppose in every other State or Territory, that they were counted as so many dollars by bankers and other dealers, because, if you could get a warrant at, say, $185 or thereabouts, it was just as good as so many dollars of gold to the holder. It cost $4 of office fees to locate a land warrant of one hundred and sixty acres; it cost nothing if you bought the land for cash; so that a warrant at $196 was just the same as paying cash. It had to be less than that if the purchaser made anything on the transaction. The average price of a warrant, I think, in my State was about $185, or a little above that, so that about $10 on each one hundred and sixty acres of land was saved to the man who wished to enter one hundred and sixty acres by purchasing a warrant instead of paying the cash. As I said, nineteen-twentieths of the land would have been entered at the time with the cash if the warrants had not been issued, or if they had not been able to purchase them at a discount.

Then comes the question, was this taken from us rightfully when we had it in our own hands? Was it rightfully or wrongfully taken? I hold that this question is one that there ought not to be any doubt upon in our minds. It is either just or unjust; it is right or it is wrong. If it is right, then the States ought to have it, whether the amount is little or much. If it is not right, the measure ought not to receive the vote of a single Senator. That is my idea upon the question. Still we sometimes honestly differ about what is right and what is wrong, and this case I suppose is no exception to the rule.

I repeat that warrants were used in the place of cash and answered the purposes of cash, and that the cash would have been paid if the warrants had not been put in. The only question, then, is whether these warrants were a gift to the soldier or whether they paid the debt that we owed to the soldier. I hold that the soldiers are as a general thing the poorest-paid people on the earth for the work they perform. They risk their lives and their all for the honor and integrity of our country. We give them the small pittance of twelve or fourteen or sixteen dollars a month, and when their work is done, dare we call it a gift, treating them as paupers or beggars at our gate, asking us to donate this land to them as a gift, or do we not rather say, "We have not paid you sufficiently, and we will now pay you a reasonable price in some other way?"

Was not this considered as a payment to the soldiers? If I were called upon to vote for a measure of that kind to-day, I should consider that the soldier had earned it and that it was his by right, and that I was not giving him, as was termed by one Senator, a "gratuity," or that I was not, as was said by another, "bartering" away the property of the nation. No, sir, I think we gave this land to the soldier to fit him out with a home. We said to him: "Here is a land warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land; go and get you a home in the new countries and settle upon it." Some of them said: "We cannot settle upon it; we cannot afford to go there." We then made the warrants assignable, and said: "If it does not suit you to go, you can sell it for money."

I do not know what the warrants sold for. The Senator from Vermont said they sold for fifty or sixty cents. That may have applied to the agricultural scrip which was thrown on the market in quantities that covered millions of acres, but it did not apply, in my country at any rate, to the land warrants which were given to the soldiers. Mr. President, the people of the older States are not losing anything by voting this claim for the benefit of the new States. Here is a return that the people in the States where they had no public lands received. They have taken of our lands for agricultural purposes I do not know how much—eight or ten million acres, perhaps. The State of New York alone was entitled, under the law that authorized the issuance of agricultural scrip to the States for the purposes of building up and maintaining their agricultural schools, to over one million acres of land.

Mr. PADDOCK. One million and fifty thousand acres.

Mr. SAUNDERS. My colleague says, to be more exact, that it was a million and fifty thousand acres of land. I did not figure it up, but I knew it was about that amount. These lands were thus taken; but we are not asking in this bill for any return for them. One million acres of land in my own State have been taken up by the people of other States with this scrip. We got but ninety thousand acres; we had but three representatives—thirty thousand acres being allowed to each Representative and Senator. The State of my friend from Vermont, who is opposing this bill so strenuously, got a great deal more of this land than we did. These States have received their share and more than their share, so that they are not the sufferers, and should not be found in opposition to this bill.

Then, again, according to the argument made by the Senator from Vermont a few moments ago, lands have been granted for railroad purposes, applying the benefits of the grant to my own State. It was the people of the United States who asked to have the Union Pacific Road and its branches constructed. They wanted the road, but did not care whether Nebraska got a foot of road. They wanted a road to the Pacific Ocean, and in building that road they had to pass through some of our States and Territories. In doing that the land grant reached into my own State, but did the Government suffer thereby? It immediately put its lands up to a double price when it sold them, and gave only half the quantity of land to a man who was an actual settler, so that there was no loss to the Government. On the contrary, it settled up that country, and has helped to build up the business that is adding so much to the wealth of the Eastern States and to the whole country. My colleague showed yesterday that we are paying seventeen times the amount of internal revenue that the State of Vermont pays to the Government, and we are taking out less than she takes out; in other words, it takes more to run that State, or to pay its government expenses, than it takes to run Nebraska. I am only trying to answer in part the argument made by the Senator from that State. I have no desire to make any attack upon his State or upon any other State. I do not care how well they may be off. Whatever is just they should do; whatever is unjust they should not do. I hold that they have got more out of this than we have in our own State, and, consequently, I say that there is no harm to be done to them, and, on the contrary, that we have a right to this fund.

There were a million acres of land lost to us in another way—land that was taken up by speculators using this agricultural scrip. If that land should be open to-day for settlement we should probably have one hundred thousand more actual settlers in our country than we have. But we have not complained of this. We only ask that justice should be done us in this matter, a matter of actual dollars and cents; a matter of value which the Government received, acknowledged, and considered to be of value, to be equal to dollars and cents deposited in the Treasury.

Therefore we have just grounds for all that we are asking in this matter. It is a mere pittance compared with what some of the other States have received, but still it is our right as we believe. We believe that we are entitled to it, justly and properly entitled to it, and, thus believing, I stand ready to advocate the bill and to vote for its passage.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Committee on Public Lands in reporting this bill have included the State of Alabama among those that are supposed to be the beneficiaries of the measure. I do not know that this was done at the instance of any one from my State; but the committee in looking over the whole field probably saw that they could not include a portion of the States controlled by similar legislation without including them all. I would very much prefer that this measure should not now be considered. I would prefer, if the honorable Senator from Vermont who is not now in his seat [Mr. EDMUNDS] would consent, that the bill should go over until the next session of this Congress, in order that the people of Alabama and their Legislature, which meets in November, should have an opportunity of looking into the question and examining and deciding for themselves whether or not their material interests would be promoted by the passage of the bill; for I take it for granted that there is not much expectation in the Senate that this bill will receive any votes unless it may be from Senators whose States would be benefited by the operation of the proposed law.

There seems to be in the Senate, so far as I can ascertain from expressions already made before us, a division of opinion between the old States and the new States on this question, the old States insisting that they have received nothing more than they were actually entitled to receive from the Federal Government, and the new States insisting that they have not received so much as they were entitled to receive either in equity or by the contract or compact under which they were admitted into the Union.

Alabama has received her percentage upon about twenty millions of money that have been realized from the sale of lands within her own territory. More than half the public domain of Alabama has been sold for money and the money paid into the Treasury of the United States, and upon that half Alabama has received 5 per cent. As I cast the account at this time, the balance stands against her, and under the operations of this bill it would remain against her from henceforth. It would be a losing business, in other words, if the State of Alabama would accept the provisions of this bill as it has been brought in from the Committee on Public Lands. It would also be a losing business in the event the bill should be amended as suggested by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. JONES.] Of course in looking for my own State at a question of this kind, that fact striking my attention leads me to scrutinize the principles of this bill more thoroughly perhaps than I otherwise might be disposed to do. I think I am in a position almost as impartial and indifferent upon this question as any other Senator upon this floor. The difference in the amount, as I estimate it, would be about this: If we should include within the amount to be computed under this bill the homestead entries which have been made since 1866 in the State of Alabama the sum of money that we would receive under the bill would run up to about $82,000. Estimating the whole amount that the Government of the United States would be required to pay for all the lands included in the homestead entries and taken up by military bounty land warrants at $5,000,000, our quota of the debt would be $100,000, and we should stand in need of $20,000 more to make our account balance. But then Alabama is not a very large State in respect of population. We have about a million of people there now, and of course the burdens of taxation, which must be resorted to for the purpose of making up this $5,000,000, would fall more heavily upon States that have larger populations and more wealth. Therefore I believe that I am in a condition to view this question about as impartially as almost any other Senator upon this floor. My interests are almost equally balanced.

I do not intend to go over the whole field of debate. I do not intend to discuss the peculiarities of the respective compacts entered into by the States with the United States. I take my own State as presenting in the history of the legislation in this respect about as full and complete a case as can be presented for the application of all the doctrines and principles that have been relied upon on either side in the discussion before the Senate. I shall therefore refer historically to the legislation in reference to the State of Alabama which belongs to this subject, and also to some part of the legislation of Alabama, so that we may see what has been the conduct of the General Government toward the State, and in what spirit that conduct has been received and acted upon by the State of Alabama, because I feel bound by the conduct of my State as expressed in resolutions and in enactments of the General Assembly.

In 1819, when provision was made for admitting Alabama into the Union, the following was stipulated as one of the terms of her admission:

> Third. That 5 per cent. of the net proceeds of the lands lying within the said Territory, and which shall be sold by Congress, from and after the 1st day of September, in the year 1819, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, shall be reserved for making public roads, canals, and improving the navigation of rivers, of which three-fifths shall be applied to those objects within the said State, under the direction of the Legislature thereof, and two-fifths to the making of a road or roads leading to the said State, under the direction of Congress.

I would here remark that one reason why I would very much prefer that this discussion should be adjourned until next December is the fact that a cause is pending in the Supreme Court of the United States, in which I happen to represent one of the parties, in which this third clause of the sixth section of this act is under consideration, and if the Supreme Court should find itself possessed of the proper jurisdiction to decide, it will decide some of the questions, and the most important questions that have been raised in this debate.

The next act on the subject which is worthy of attention was passed on the 22d of May, 1822, in the third section of which act it is provided:

> That the Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, and whenever the quarterly accounts of public moneys of the several land offices in the State of Alabama shall be settled, pay 3 per cent. of the net proceeds of the sales of the lands of the United States lying within the State of Alabama, which since the 1st day of September, in the year 1819, have been, or hereafter may be, sold by the United States, after deducting all expenses incident to the same, to such person or persons as may or shall be authorized by the Legislature of the said State of Alabama to receive the same.

Congress there provided that the State of Alabama might appoint an agent, an individual to receive this money. The State of Alabama afterward provided by statute that the governor might appoint such an agent, and, so far as I am advised, all of that statutory arrangement on the part of both governments still exists.

Mr. President, I refer to this matter for the purpose of suggesting to the Senate the consideration of this proposition: Whatever question has been argued here and whatever question shall be argued here upon the existing state of the law is a question of a judicial nature, to be decided properly by a court. I confess that I have a strong and firm objection to the decision by the Congress of the United States of any questions relating to the payment of the debts of the Government to individuals or to States which can properly and legitimately be made the subject of judicial ascertainment. I believe in relegating to the judicial tribunals of this country the decision of all questions that properly belong to them. Perhaps it is because I have not a sufficiently broad view of the law, or perhaps not a sufficiently definite or distinct view of the law; but I cannot see why the State of Alabama could not under this statute send an agent to Washington City and move for a writ of mandamus in the supreme court of the District of Columbia against the Commissioner of the General Land Office to compel him to state an account between that State and the United States Government so as to include 5 per cent. upon the value of all lands entered therein upon military land warrants, if the law authorizes us to have that money. I remember that in the decision of Marbury vs. Madison a doctrine quite equivalent to the proposition that I now state was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. I do believe that if the State of Alabama thought she was entitled to have the computation of this 5 per cent. made upon that amount in value of land which had been taken up by military land warrants an open remedy exists in her behalf in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, and I believe that that agent could come as an individual and prosecute his writ of mandamus. But suppose I may be mistaken in that. Suppose there should be some mystery of executive power which would fence off the writ of mandamus, so that it would not lie against the Commissioner of the General Land Office in the enforcement of a matter of right of this character, it would be very easy for Congress to empower that court to entertain jurisdiction of the subject, and then we should be relieved of this endeavor on the part of Congress, not merely to create laws and to create debts and obligations under laws, but afterward to sit in judgment under those laws and to enforce our judgment through our decrees here—a matter which I think legitimately belongs to the judicial department of this Government.

The legislation in Congress on this subject which followed after that which I have mentioned related to the inclusion within the meaning of this act of admission of certain Chickasaw land grants, and after that of certain reservations in favor of the Creek Indians. It is not necessary for me, in order to make apparent the proposition for which I contend, to read those enactments. Congress as late as 1836 made provision in reference to the computation of the 5 per cent. upon those lands which had been reserved by treaty with the Chickasaw, and I believe the Choctaw, and I know with the Creek Indians.

Those reservations were given by the treaty of March, 1832, as I remember, to the heads of families of the Creek Nation. They took their lands out of the public domain by selection, by reservation; and they were permitted to sell them at private sale with the consent and approbation of the proper officer of the Land Office. It was contended on the part of the State of Alabama that these lands should be included in the computation of the 5 per cent. That was a disputed proposition. Alabama did not see proper to go to law about it. She came to Congress for relief, and she got it. Now, what was the nature of that relief? Alabama conceded, by making the application, that she would not get it under the law as it stood, but that morally or equitably she was entitled to it; or that she was entitled to it as a part of that general public policy by which the Government of the United States tried to build up her population, as the Government also tried to build up the population of all the new States. So Alabama came to Congress and made this request, and Congress granted it. I do not understand that this act of Congress was a construction of the act of 1819, providing for her admission into the Union. I regard it as an amendment of that act. True, it was not necessary that the State of Alabama should formally accept it, because it was an amendment made in her favor; it was for her benefit, and her acceptance was presumed. I think that that act and the act in regard to the Chickasaw reservation, and, indeed, all the acts of Congress passed since these original acts of admission, or compact as it is called here, were mere amendments of the original compact. I regard this bill which has been reported by the Committee on Public Lands to the Senate as a mere amendment of all these compacts in one mass. In other words, unless Congress shall enact some law in addition to those which exist upon the statute-book, the right will not exist. This bill does not have reference to the remedy alone. If it had reference to the remedy, it would instruct the Commissioner to compute the 5 per cent. upon all those lands which have been taken up by all appropriations in the nature of sales, of whatever kind or character, and would not go on to define what were sales under the different and various compacts entered into on the admission of these States into the Union.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLUMB. Suppose that Congress, by legislation, had provided that the bonds of the United States should be receivable for public lands, and suppose they had been so received, would not further legislation be required in order to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the proper authority to pay the 5 per cent. upon the sales made in that way?

Mr. MORGAN. Unquestionably so; but what would be the nature of an act which made provision that they should be so received? That would be an amendment of existing law; it would be a new law, not a law declaratory of a right existing under an old one. My proposition is that all the acts in regard to all the States which enlarge the operation of the original compacts made with them are in the nature of amendments to the original law. They increase and enlarge a right which was not covered or fully defined by the original proposition.

In 1841 the Congress of the United States, dealing with the 2 per cent. portion of the 5 per cent. funds which had been granted in 1819 to the State of Alabama, authorized the payment of that money into the hands of the treasurer of the State for the purpose of being applied to certain specified works of public improvement, to wit: the connection by road (it did not say railroad, but I suppose that is what was contemplated) of the eastern and western borders of that State, commencing at a point opposite to Columbus, in Georgia, and the other end to touch the Mississippi boundary wherever the Legislature might see proper to locate it. The other part of the provision was to connect the navigable waters of the Tennessee River with the navigable waters of the Alabama River. That was the particular purpose to which the 2 per cent. fund was to be applied when the Congress of the United States consented that it would release its own control over it and place it entirely in the control of the Legislature of Alabama.

I wish to remark here, in reference to the application of that fund, that the waters of the Tennessee River and of the Mobile Bay have been already connected by works of internal improvement, which have been the recipient of the 2 per cent. fund, and also of the 3 per cent. fund; and so in like manner the other part of the purpose of this grant has been entirely completed. If there be a trust resting upon the Congress of the United States limiting the expenditure of that money to the purpose of making these lines of communication, that trust is executed, and the State of Alabama could not have a legitimate right to that money unless, in addition to providing one line of communication across the State from east to west, and from north to south, crossing each other at right angles as they do, it should claim now that it had a right to build two or more lines of communication from these very points across the entire bosom of the State and to its opposing borders.

Under the terms of this grant as it was originally made, and as it has been amended by acts of Congress and accepted and acted upon by the Legislature of Alabama, the money which we would derive under this bill, if we should get any at all, and the money that we will hereafter derive from the 5 per cent. fund, would be expended in Alabama merely for the purpose of building up corporations, already powerful, that have completed their lines of railways. Alabama stands in the attitude of a cestui que trust, who has received from this fund all the benefit that was designed to be conferred upon her under the provisions of the original enactment. That is to say, she is connected across all of her borders by lines of railway communication with the assistance of this fund, and then she is connected with all the outer world by similar lines.

Mr. ALLISON. Would I disturb my friend if I should ask him a question?

Mr. MORGAN. Not at all.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator what the State of Alabama did with the 5 per cent. fund granted to her under the act of 1855? Did that fund go to this general purpose for improvement of which the Senator speaks?

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator means the 10 per cent. fund?

Mr. ALLISON. No; I mean the 5 per cent. fund under the act of 1855 whereby all the Indian reservations were included.

Mr. MORGAN. That was expended, as I understand, in the improvements to which I have alluded. That all went together; and a part of the 10 per cent. fund that the State of Alabama received, which was called the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, was applied to her foreign debt.

Looking at this question as a Senator from the State of Alabama, I do not see how the people of that State are to be at all benefited by any increase of the 5 per cent. fund, because as well by their legislation as by acts of Congress, and by the compact of admission itself, this fund is held in trust for particular purposes, and these trusts, as I have remarked, have been really and substantially executed. If we had the privilege of bestowing it upon our school fund I can see where it would be of some advantage to us, provided the amount of money we should receive would be greater than that we had to pay; but I regard all of this 5 per cent. fund, at least in reference to the future operation of this proposed law, as a mere tax upon the people of my State.

What we need in Alabama more than anything else is population. We want our vacant lands occupied and cultivated. Instead of having a million of people in Alabama we are easily able to accommodate three or four millions; and a great proportion of that population would have the advantage of entirely fresh and virgin soils for cultivation. We need population far more than we need the assistance of measures like this. When our people are required, as they should be required, to pay at least the amount of money into the Treasury of the United States which they would get under the 5 per cent. law in order to take up the public lands, how are they advantaged if they have to pay more for their lands than the 5 per cent. would amount to when lands are estimated at a dollar and a quarter per acre? It would be only a tax upon the people of Alabama for the purpose of raising a fund to assist railroad corporations which are not needy in building up new lines of communication between the north and the south and the east and the west of that State. In all the future operations of this 5 per cent. law upon the State of Alabama it is a mere tax upon those who shall occupy the unoccupied lands; those who shall enter lands or buy lands from the Government of the United States. It is merely for the purpose of raising a fund to hand over to men who do not need it, and who in return would not be expected to render any essential public service to the people of that State.

Now, I come to another feature of the legislation of Congress in reference to the public lands in the State of Alabama, which is referred to in the amendment of the Senator from Florida. In 1866, after we had passed through the war and when we had some hope and certainly great need for an increase of the population of the State, the Congress of the United States withdrew all the lands in that State from the operation of every public land law except the homestead law. It prevented all entries of land at any price whatsoever; it prevented the sales of public lands, and confined the people of that State to the single right of occupying homesteads by actual settlement upon the public lands, in accordance with the provisions of the acts of Congress upon that subject. We regarded that as a hardship. While this law was thus bearing down upon five of the Southern States the remaining States of the Union that had public lands within their borders were permitted to enjoy the benefit of all the acts of Congress in reference to location of military land warrants and in reference to public sales. Pre-emption rights, and whatever rights the Government had granted theretofore, the citizens of the other States were permitted to enjoy the benefit of; but we were shut out. The purpose of this legislation was, of course, entirely obvious. The purpose was to enable the negro population to acquire homes without expense. Some of them did so; and some of the poorer classes of white people did so; but it was such a restriction upon the sale of public lands, such a barrier and burden to the immigration of people into our State, as that the State lost very considerably by it in the increase of its population and its resources and wealth. That is a just matter of complaint on our part; and if this bill is passed it should include a provision to entitle us to the 5 per cent. upon all the homestead entries that were made during this ten years of time when the other rights of entry were suspended and denied to us by the act of Congress. But the bill as reported from the committee, instead of giving us the benefit of the 5 per cent. upon the lands taken up under the homestead entries during this period of suspension, absolutely denies it to us, and we have now no right whatever according to the provisions of this bill to receive any compensation upon those lands which we were prohibited from buying, and which were therefore handed over to men for nothing, you may say, except the fees and expenses of paying for patents for the land at the land offices. These lands were handed over to them without cost and without price. If this is a bill to settle the equities between the different States of the Union, if it is a bill which goes upon the high ground that there has been some inequitable arrangement in regard to the disposition of the public lands and the 5 per cent. due thereupon, let it be converted into a bill to reach all the evils which have arisen in the course of the administration of the public land laws in the States, and let full and entire justice be done.

But, Mr. President, while I believe that it is as much our right to have 5 per cent. computed upon the lands taken up by homestead entry as it is the right of others to have 5 per cent. computed upon lands taken up by military bounty land warrants, I do not believe that it was within the contemplation of the law-makers at the time of the admission of these different States into the Union and the making of these different compacts that a computation should be made upon anything else than upon the sales of land for money. We hear of trusts in this debate. What kind of trusts? Trusts not attaching to lands, but trusts attaching to money. The lawyers of this body cannot fail to see the distinction which thrusts itself upon their attention, I think, between a trust attaching to the land of the United States in these various States that have been admitted into the Union, and a trust that attaches to the money when realized by a sale of the lands. The difference, to my mind, is entirely obvious that no State of the American Union, none of these States when they were admitted into the Union came into this body of States with any right or privilege attaching in their behalf in the nature of a trust upon the lands included in their borders. On the contrary, the Congress of the United States could not have encumbered the lands with such a trust as that, because the Constitution requires that Congress shall freely dispose of the public domain.

The Constitution does not permit the States and Congress to dispose of the public domain; it is not to be done by a joint arrangement between them, but the sole and entire power of disposition is vested in the Congress of the United States under the Constitution. If the Congress should undertake to embarrass its right of disposition, if this Congress, for instance, should undertake to embarrass the power of a succeeding Congress in the disposition of the public lands by creating a trust upon the whole body of the lands for specific purposes in favor of a State or of individuals, I think that this Congress would fail to execute its purpose because of the unconstitutionality of such an endeavor. The reason is that Congress could never have created a trust of that kind in favor of these particular States without having deprived itself of the power with which the Constitution invests it to make an absolute final disposition of the public lands, and that, too, in accordance with its own discretion.

It seems to me that the language of these different compacts, as they are called, is quite forcible enough to impress upon an ordinary mind, at least, without any need of illustration or argument, that it was the intention of Congress in the passage of these laws to retain to itself the entire discretionary power of disposing of these lands and to secure to the States the right to 5 per cent. upon the money when it should be realized. Whatever there may be in the nature of a trust connected with this whole subject attaches upon the money and not upon the land. The grantor of this trust (and I assume that the Government of the United States is the grantor, as I hall presently show) reserved to itself the absolute power of disposition in any way it saw proper—the power to dispose of it by gift or by sale—the power to dispose of it at a dollar and a quarter an acre or at twelve and a half cents an acre, or in any way that it saw proper.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The absolute power to dispose of it.

Mr. ALLISON. On the point to which the Senator from Alabama is now speaking, I should like to call his attention to a proviso in the first section of the act of 1841.

Mr. MORGAN. Please to read it; I have not got it before me.

Mr. ALLISON. I was trying to find it. It is the act distributing the proceeds of the sales of the public lands.

Mr. MORGAN. Oh, yes; I think I have that.

Mr. ALLISON. That act expressly reserves the right of the United States to make such disposition of the public lands as it shall see proper thereafter, with reference to price, &c., but no such reservation is found in any of these compacts of admission. Therefore it seems that the men who passed the act of 1841 did think it necessary to make such a reservation in order that the United States might exercise the power of which the Senator is now speaking.

Mr. MORGAN. Law-makers, of course, who have any respect for the Constitution of the country, in drafting acts of Congress are always cautious in their expressions to reserve to each department of the Government all of its constitutional authority. Those who framed these original compacts, perhaps, were not as much influenced by a feeling of caution as those who framed the law to which the Senator has called my attention. Therefore, in the act distributing the proceeds of the sales of public lands there was perhaps an undue caution used, but that admission by that Congress does not prove at all that the Congress of the United States had ever surrendered to the States or to anybody else the absolute power of disposal of the public domain, because Congress could never have made that surrender without a violation of its constitutional duty.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall not trouble the Senator to read the act I referred to. It is found on page 454 of the volume, and is an express reservation of the right to make such disposition of the public lands as Congress in its judgment may see proper to exercise.

Mr. MORGAN. I regard those reservations as being merely cautionary, as being intended to exclude any argument or conclusion to the contrary, but they add nothing at all to the strength of the proposition that Congress has the power under the Constitution to make an absolute disposal of the public lands; and that phraseology includes whatsoever disposal Congress may see proper to make in the exercise of its right of eminent domain for the purposes legitimately connected with the disposal of the public lands.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to disturb the Senator, but is it not a disposal within the meaning of the Constitution to say to a State coming into the Union that if you come into the Union on certain conditions which we impose you shall have 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the land in that State?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It did not say "the proceeds of the land."

Mr. MORGAN. That is unquestionably a disposal of 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of these public lands whenever these moneys accrue from the sales, but it is not a disposal of the land, neither is it a mortgage upon it, neither is it an incumbrance upon it, nor is it a shadow even upon the title of the United States. The title of the United States remains absolutely as perfect after it has granted to a State the right of 5 per cent. upon the proceeds of such land as it chooses to sell as it was before such a provision was made.

I wish to say something of the legislation of my own State on this subject, more with a view of my justification before my own constituency than before the Senate of the United States. We have had a traditional policy in Alabama upon the subject of the public lands, and it has always been directly in keeping and abreast with what I conceive to be the wise and excellent policy of the Government of the United States in their disposal, particularly when that policy has looked toward the furnishing to the people at the lowest possible price homes for settlement in the newer parts of our territory. It will be remembered that very early, even, indeed, before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, the older States that held vast domains lying to the northwest, Virginia for instance, yielded up their lands virtually to the Government of the United States by an act of cession with certain restrictions and qualifications therein expressed, having for the purpose of the cession, as they expressed it, the payment of the public debt, the payment of expenses of the revolutionary war, and also the encouragement of the building up of new States and also the furnishing population from the older States migrating to the West convenient and desirable homes. In the grant made by Virginia, of the Northwestern Territory, and in the grant made by Georgia of the territory running west to the Mississippi River, an express stipulation was imposed that the territory should be divided up into States and should be admitted into the Union when each Territory had, I believe, 60,000 population. The idea was at that time to spread our borders to the West, to encourage our people to go to the West to take up homes and to open up the vast and rich domain which since that time has produced before the world, as I think, the most marvelous change from a wilderness to a cultivated, bright, and beautiful country, that has existed in any country in all the annals of history.

I will read a memorial of the General Assembly of the State of Alabama to the Congress of the United States which was passed by the General Assembly and approved on the 16th of January, 1844, relating to this subject:

The senate and house of representatives of the State of Alabama, in General Assembly convened, respectfully request the Congress of the United States to graduate and reduce the prices of the public lands within the State of Alabama which have been long in market and remain unsold, with a view of getting clear of the expense of the land-office system and making those lands private property.

There are some nineteen millions of acres of public lands within the State, which have been in market, some for ten, some for twenty, and some for thirty years; and notwithstanding the several periods of a rise and fall of prices of products, and the great rise of lands and speculation in them, and notwithstanding our citizens have been seized with the spirit of speculation, and have traversed all of the West and Southwestern States in quest of public lands, yet so worthless have been the barrens and mountains of Alabama, that but few tracts have been entered of this great waste. Congress has often been requested to graduate the prices according to the periods of time they have been in market, and has hitherto refused to grant this most reasonable request. If ten cents per acre had been obtained for them twenty years ago, it would have been a great benefit both to the State and General Government. The one would have had the value of the property, and have been free from the expense of attending to it, while the other would have had citizens. As it is, Congress owns waste, valueless lands, and Alabama has an uninhabited desert instead of tax-paying inhabitants. Why should Congress longer attempt to force up the prices of deserts and mountains, which, although surrounded by inhabitants from fifty to two hundred years, are yet not worth twenty cents per acre, and in many cases not half that sum? What reason is there to conclude that similar lands are worth more money in Alabama, where there are fewer inhabitants, more recently settled, and the country less healthy? Your memorialists request that Congress may reduce the prices of said lands according to the periods of time that the several districts may have been in the market, and securing rights of pre-emption to occupants for limited periods of time at each stage of reduction.

And be it resolved, That the governor transmit a copy of the foregoing memorial to the Senators and Representatives in Congress.

This memorial was repeated in substance by the Legislature of Alabama at successive sessions. The Congress of the United States yielding to these requests, coming not merely from Alabama but from elsewhere, reduced the price of lands so that those that had been in the market for thirty years or more might be obtained by entry at twelve and one-half cents per acre. I desire to ask the friends of this bill a question. If a trust was put upon the lands in Alabama at the time of her admission into the Union whereby she should receive 5 per cent. of the proceeds of the sales of the lands, and if the lands at that time were in the market at $1.25 per acre, the sum assumed in this bill as the basis on which the calculation must be made throughout the whole period covered by the bill, why was it that the Congress of the United States had the power to break the trust, to take from it its most essential value by reducing the lands from $1.25 down to twelve and one-half cents? If it was a trust for any purpose at all, as is assumed in this bill, it was a trust at $1.25 an acre and not at twelve and one-half cents an acre. Now, I take just the opposite view of it. I think there is more than one trust connected with this matter, and I shall presently read from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which I think fully defines the nature of this trust. But the great trust, the trust which is the overpowering and overmastering part of this whole programme of the disposition of the public lands is the trust for the building up of these new States, for their admission into the Union, for filling them up with population, for the reduction of the price of the public lands so that the people might enjoy homesteads therein, and thereby increase the general prosperity of the entire land. That was the master trust that was involved in that system of legislation, and in providing the fund of 5 per cent. which might be taken out of the land sales and devoted to particular works of internal improvement.

Alabama was extremely chary and cautious about the receipt of the proceeds of the sales of the public lands. Her statesmen did not believe in the constitutionality of that law; but other States received the money, and after a while Alabama gave her consent to receive it. In the third section of the act of February 4, 1846, in receiving the money, she declares:

That in receiving the portion of the fund now allotted to Alabama from the act of distribution already passed by the Congress of the United States, Alabama does not thereby sanction that policy, but still disapproves it, and is opposed to any like legislation in future.

This is legislation not precisely like that, but very much like it. This seems to me to be more nearly a parallel case with the distribution of the proceeds of the sales of public lands than any other in the history of American legislation. The principles are almost identical in both cases, except that it is claimed in the case presented in the bill now before the Senate that there is a compact, a contract, an agreement, or a covenant, by which the United States Government is compelled to pay this 5 per cent. or otherwise to forfeit its duty to the State.

But I go to the point of this discussion. There is some misunderstanding I think in the Senate in reference to the state of the law in the United States upon the subject of the title that the States have and that the United States have in the public lands. A case was brought from my own State, the case of Pollard's lessee vs. Hagan, which it seems to me disposes of that question and entirely overturns the theory which was advanced, as I understood, yesterday by the Senator from Florida [Mr. JONES] upon the authority of Mr. Sumner, of Massachusetts, that public lands within the States would have been liable to taxation but for the concessions which were made in the acts of admission by the States, whereby they agreed that they would not tax them until five years after they had been sold by the General Government. The case to which I refer was an action of ejectment brought by the plaintiffs in error, Pollard and others, against the defendants in error, John Hagan and others, in the circuit court of Mobile County, for the purpose of recovering a piece of land that had been granted by an act of Congress, followed by a patent, which land at the time of the admission of the State of Alabama into the Union was covered by the waters of the Mobile Bay when at high tide, but afterward by accretions of alluvium and by the work of man these lands were drained off and became dry. The Government of the United States considering that it had a title to the lands, under the provisions of an act of Congress, gave a patent for this land to John Pollard and others, and then a question arose between the State and the Government as to who had the right to that parcel of land. It was in the discussion of that question that the doctrines to which I now refer came prominently forward and were settled by the Supreme Court; because what is stated here as a part of the doctrine of the law upon the subject to which I refer is considered by the Supreme Court as being entirely necessary to a decision of the cause. I will read only part of this decision. It is too long to detain the Senate with reading the entire opinion:

Although this is the first time we have been called upon to draw the line that separates the sovereignty and jurisdiction of the Government of the Union and the State governments over the subject in controversy, many of the principles which enter into and form the elements of the question have been settled by previous well-considered decisions of this court, to which we shall have occasion to refer in the course of this investigation.

The counsel for the plaintiffs insisted, in argument, that * * * by the compact between the United States and Alabama, on her admission into the Union, it was agreed that the people of Alabama forever disclaimed all right or title to the waste or unappropriated lands lying within the State, and that the same should remain at the sole disposal of the United States, and that all the navigable waters within the State should forever remain public highways, and free to the citizens of that State and the United States without any tax, duty, or impost, or toll therefor, imposed by that State. That by these articles of the compact the land under the navigable waters, and the public domain above high water, were alike reserved to the United States, and alike subject to be sold by them, and to give any other construction to these compacts would be to yield up to Alabama and the other new States all the public lands within their limits.

We think a proper examination of this subject will show that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil in and to the territory of which Alabama or any of the new States were formed, except for temporary purposes, and to execute the trusts created by the acts of the Virginia and Georgia Legislatures, and the deeds of cession executed by them to the United States, and the trust created by the treaty with the French Republic of the 30th of April, 1803, ceding Louisiana.

All that part of Alabama which lies between the thirty-first and thirty-fifth degrees of north latitude was ceded by the State of Georgia to the United States by deed bearing date the 24th day of April, 1802, which is substantially, in all its principles and stipulations, like the deed of cession executed by Virginia to the United States on the 1st day of March, 1784, by which she ceded to the United States the territory northwest of the Ohio River. Both of these deeds of cession stipulated that all the lands within the territory ceded, and not reserved or appropriated to other purposes, should be considered as a common fund for the use and benefit of all the United States, to be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose, and for no other use or purpose whatever.

There is the deed of cession and there is the first trust that is created, and that trust comported precisely with the powers Congress exercises over the public domain. It was a trust for the use and benefit of all the United States, to be faithfully and bona fide disposed of for that purpose and for no other purpose whatever. There might be some doubt about the constitutionality of the 5 per cent. law upon that proposition; it never has been questioned, I believe, but it seems to me almost a wonder that some astute attorney-general has not denied the right of the States to this 5 per cent., notwithstanding it was included in the compacts of their admission, because of the fact that the deed of cession by which the Government of the United States gained its title created in favor of all the people of the United States one peculiar trust and no other, created one trust and shut out all idea and contemplation of any other; but I do not take that as a position of law. I use that as an argument to emphasize what appears afterward in this opinion:

And the statute passed by Virginia, authorizing her delegates to execute this deed, and which is recited in it, authorizes them, in behalf of the State, by a proper deed to convey to the United States, for the benefit of said States, all the right, title, and claim, as well of soil as jurisdiction, upon condition—upon condition that the territory so ceded shall be laid out and formed into States, containing a suitable extent of territory, not less than one hundred nor more than one hundred and fifty miles square, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit, and that the States so formed shall be republican States, and admitted members of the Federal Union, having the same rights of sovereignty, freedom, and independence as the other States.

Here is the condition annexed to the trust—

That was the purpose of the grant, that States might be formed, and a condition was annexed to the grant which the United States not only engaged that it would comply with, but has complied with in the erection of these new States within this territory, not exactly according to these prescribed boundaries, but somewhat larger.

And the delegates conclude the deed thus: "Now know ye, that we, the said Thomas Jefferson, Samuel Hardy, Arthur Lee, and James Monroe, by virtue of the power and authority committed to us by the act of the said General Assembly of Virginia before recited, and in the name, and for and on behalf of the said Commonwealth, do, by these presents, convey, transfer, assign, and make over unto the United States in Congress assembled, for the benefit of said States, Virginia inclusive, all right, title, and claim, as well of soil as of jurisdiction, which the said Commonwealth hath to the territory or tract of country within the limits of the Virginia charter, situate, lying, and being to the northwest of the river Ohio, to and for the uses and purposes, and on the conditions of the said recited act."

The act by which Georgia ceded the territory now covered by the States of Mississippi and Alabama, in consideration of something more than a million of dollars paid by the Government of the United States to Georgia, followed precisely the terms of the act of Virginia. The one was adopted before the adoption of the present Constitution and the other afterward, and that, the Supreme Court say, is the only difference between them.

Thus it appears—

The court continues—

that the stipulations, trusts, and conditions are substantially the same in both of these deeds of cession, and the acts of Congress, and of the State Legislatures in relation thereto, are founded in the same reasons of policy and interest, with this exception, however—the cession made by Virginia was before the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, and that of Georgia afterward. Taking the legislative acts of the United States, and the States of Virginia and Georgia, and their deeds of cession to the United States, and giving to each separately, and to all jointly, a fair interpretation, we must come to the conclusion that it was the intention of the parties to invest the United States with the eminent domain of the country ceded, both national and municipal, for the purposes of temporary government—

I desire the Senate to give its attention to that proposition, that it was the intention of the contracting parties, as expressed in the deed and expressed in the legislation of Congress and also in the legislation of the respective States, "to invest the United States with the eminent domain of the country ceded, both national and municipal, for the purposes of temporary government"— and to hold it in trust for the performance of the stipulations and conditions expressed in the deeds of cession and the legislative acts connected with them.

Whatever trust might have been created after that time which derogates from this original trust created by the deed of cession was, to say the least of it, a trust created in bad faith to the other States of the American Union, if it was not unconstitutional.

The court say further:

To a correct understanding of the rights, powers, and duties of the parties to these contracts, it is necessary to enter into a more minute examination of the rights of eminent domain, and the right to the public lands. When the United States accepted the cession of the territory they took upon themselves the trust to hold the municipal eminent domain for the new States, and to invest them with it to the same extent, in all respects, that it was held by the States ceding the territories.

The right which belongs to the society or to the sovereign, of disposing, in case of necessity, and for the public safety, of all the wealth contained in the state, is called the eminent domain. It is evident that this right is, in certain cases, necessary to him who governs, and is, consequently, a part of the empire or sovereign power. (Vat. Law of Nations, section 244.) This definition shows that the eminent domain, although a sovereign power, does not include all sovereign power, and this explains the sense in which it is used in this opinion. The compact made between the United States and the State of Georgia was sanctioned by the Constitution of the United States, by the third section of the fourth article of which it is declared that "new States may be admitted by the Congress into this Union; but no new State shall be formed or erected within the jurisdiction of any other State, nor any State be formed by the junction of two or more States, or parts of States, without the consent of the Legislatures of the States concerned, as well as of Congress."

When Alabama was admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States, she succeeded to all the rights of sovereignty, jurisdiction, and eminent domain which Georgia possessed at the date of the cession, except so far as this right was diminished by the public lands remaining in the possession and under the control of the United States for the temporary purposes provided for in the deed of cession and the legislative acts connected with it. Nothing remained to the United States according to the terms of the agreement but the public lands. And if an express stipulation had been inserted in the agreement granting the municipal right of sovereignty and eminent domain to the United States, such stipulation would have been void and inoperative, because the United States have no constitutional capacity to exercise municipal jurisdiction, sovereignty, or eminent domain within the limits of a State or elsewhere, except in the cases in which it is expressly granted.
